An explanation

European lifestyle migrants tend to live in housing estates where most of the residents come from the same country so their language and national identity are maintained.

Urbanizaciones have been developed where promoters had advantages.

In San Miguel de Salinas
European foreign residents represent 65% of the population.

An association of neighbours wanted to know the degree of integration of the European residents into the Spanish society.

A survey to 266 Europeans was conducted in 2010.

The profile of a typical European resident is between 55 and 75 years, predominantly British closely followed by Germans.

The majority moved to San Miguel during the past decade and now resides there permanently, with 41% giving the better climate as their reason for moving.

The findings revealed that a lack of understanding of the language and culture, combined with isolation in urbanizaciones which are predominantly home to Europeans, has largely prevented their ability to mix.

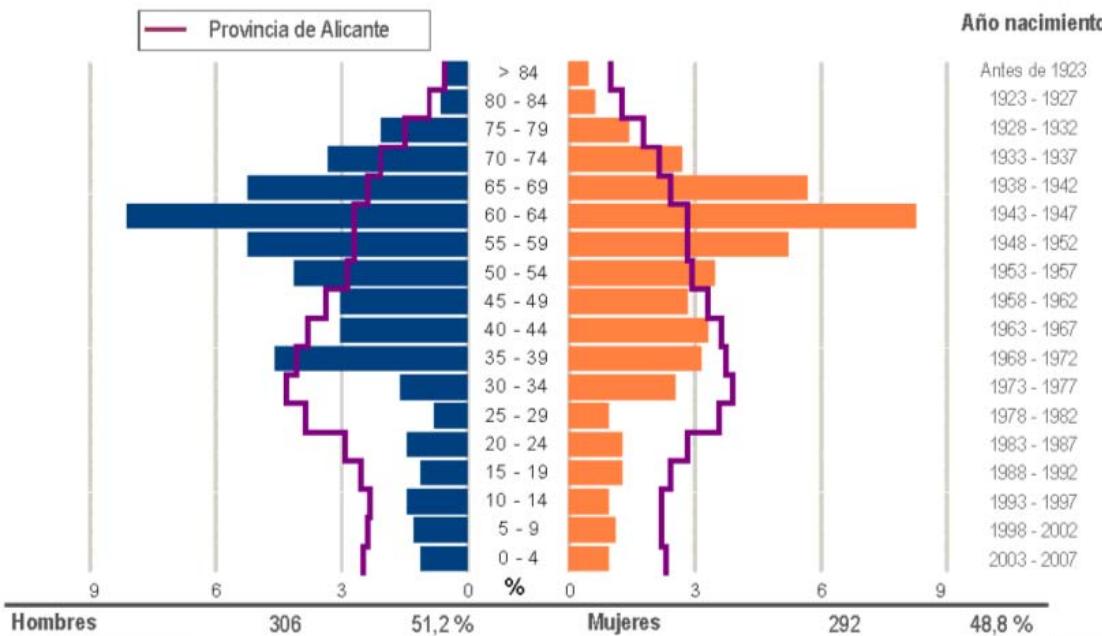

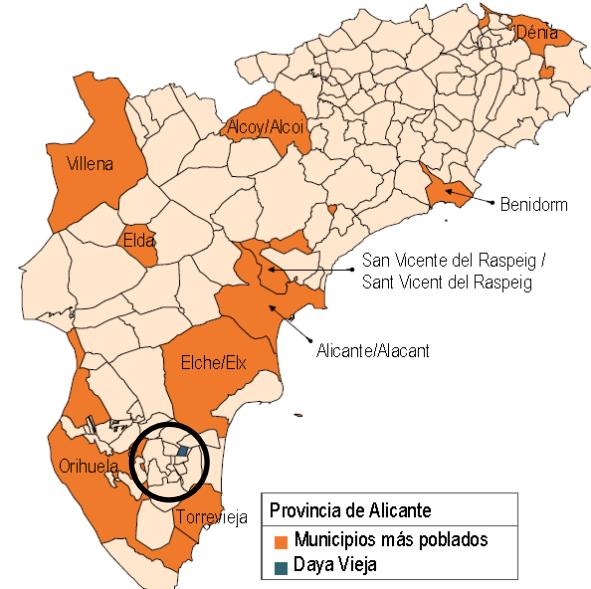

But, the more integrated a European citizen feels, more satisfied is with the services and with the Spanish lifestyle.
