News Reports

AIMS:

To Read News Reports from a Tabloid.
To Read News Reports from a Broadsheet.

To write News Reports for a Tabloid.
To write News Reports for a Broadsheet.

To listen to Radio or TV News.
To report Radio News.
To report Television News.

METHODOLOGY:

Task-based approach. Lectures, practical workshops, and laboratory practice.

MATERIALS:

1. Newspapers.
2. Radio-News Programmes.
3. Television-News Programmes.
4. OHP and transparencies.
5. Video-camera.

LINGUISTIC CONTENT:

Review of Macro-markers employed in the structure of reports. Review of, Prepositions and Reported Speech, and tenses used in Narratives

TIMING:

6 sessions approximately.

PROJECT:

1. Choose pieces of news of your interest and design a Television News Programme. Report the news orally making connections with different reporters on site. Videotape the activity. This task should be included in the Oral Video Project.
2. Write a news report and include it in the Newspaper Final Project.
Lesson 1: Reading the English Press. News Reports

Reading news stories from Tabloids and Broadsheets.

Reading and understanding News Stories are not easy tasks. As in other types of texts it is important to know the conventions. These conventions are related to the quality of the newspaper, the audience, the impact, the mode and the tone and sometimes to the editor's personal view. In this unit we will try to cover all these issues taking special care of two long-established styles: the quality press and the tabloids.

AIMS:
To Read News Reports from Tabloids.
To Read News Reports from Broadsheets.
To analyse the vocabulary and content of News Reports.
To analyse the syntax of News Reports.
To analyse the structure of News Reports.
To look at different types of News Reports.

METHODOLOGY:
Use of Internet and real newspapers as sources for News Reports.
Analysis of the texts by means of successive approaches.
Lectures and practical workshops.

MATERIALS:
1. Newspapers.
2. Internet
3. OHP transparencies and filter pens.

Preliminary Activity:

Discussion:
In groups of four or five look at these questions and discuss the possible answers, when finished, report to the class:

1. Tell me four essential features of a piece of news:
2. Are there many kinds of news reports?
3. Discuss the format of a typical news item.
4. Is the topic important when writing a piece of news? Which type of topics are newsworthy?
5. Think about the way you read news stories. Do you always read them from the beginning to the end? If you don’t, why?
6. Should we expect differences in the way stories are treated in broadsheets and tabloids?
Lesson 1.1: Reading 1

Read the following excerpts.

The fragments you have below have been extracted from George Mikes’ book How to be an Alien. In this book George Mikes tries to present, analyse and criticize the British way of life in 24 quite humorous chapters. Although the book was first written and published in 1946, some of its views are still in force. The following paragraphs try to show how different reporters have different ways of approaching the same News Story. Read them and discuss your opinion with your class-mates.

JOURNALISM OR THE FREEDOM OF THE PRESS

The Fact

THERE was some trouble with the Buburuk tribe in the Pacific Island, Charamak. A party of ten English and two American soldiers, under the command of Capt. R. L. A. T. W. Tilbury, raided the island and took 217 revolutionary, native troublemakers prisoner and wrecked two large oil-dumps. The party remained ashore an hour-and-a-half and returned to their base without loss to themselves.

How to report this event? It depends on which newspaper you work for.

... It would be exceedingly perilous to overestimate the significance of the raid, but it can be fairly proclaimed that it would be even more dangerous to underestimate it. The success of the raid clearly proves that the native defences are not invulnerable; it would be fallacious and deceptive, however, to conclude that these defences are vulnerable. The number of revolutionaries captured cannot be safely stated, but it seems likely that the number is well over 216 but well under 218.

---

‘Concerning the two wrecked oil-dumps I can give this information to the House. In the first half of this year the amount of native oil destroyed by the Army, Navy and the R.A.F. - excluding however, the Fleet Air Arm - is one-half as much as three times the amount destroyed during the corresponding months of the previous year, seven and a half times as much as the two-fifths destroyed two years ago and three-quarters as much again as twelve times one-sixth destroyed three years ago.’ (Loud cheers from the Government benches.)

You jump to your feet and ask this question:

You: Is the Right Hon. Gentleman aware that people in this country are puzzled and worried by the fact that Charamak was raided and not Ragamak?

The Right Hon. Member: I have nothing to add to my statement given on and August, 1892.

The most interesting feature of the Charamak raid is the fact that Reggie Tilbury is the fifth son of the Earl of Bayswater. He was an Oxford Blue, a first-class cricketer and quite good at polo. When I talked to his wife (Lady Clarisse, the daughter of Lord Elasson) at Claridges today, she wore a black suit and a tiny black hat with a yellow feather in it. She said: ‘Reggie was always very much interested in warfare.’ Later she remarked: ‘It was clever of him, wasn’t it?’

Dear Sir, in connection with the Charamak raid I would like to mention as a matter of considerable interest that it was in that little Pacific Island that the English poet, John Flat, wrote his famous poem “The Cod” in 1693.

Yours, etc.

Sir, - I am very grateful to Mr ... for calling attention to John Flat's poem 'The Cod.' May I be allowed to use this opportunity, however, to correct a widespread and in my view very unfortunate error which the great masses of the British people seem to share with your correspondent. 'The Cod,' although John Flat started writing it in 1693, was only finished in the early days of January 1694.

Yours, etc ...

'Yanks Conquer Pacific Ocean.'

1. Match the texts with the following sub-genres of news reporting:

   a. Letter to the editor of the Times
   b. A report in the house of Commons.
   c. The Evening Standard
   d. Answer to a letter to the editor
   e. London Correspondent of The Oklahoma Sun
   f. The Times
2. In groups of two or three analyse the texts and reach a conclusion about the main topic of the different fragments.

3. Do the same with the subtopics.

4. In the different fragments, what type of information has been selected from the real fact? What type of information has not been mentioned? Why?

5. Do topic selection differ according to context and sub-genre?

6. How can we distinguish different sub-genres?

7. List the stylistic features employed in the different sub-genres.

Lesson 1.2: Reading 2

Read the following news stories and in groups discuss the questions.

The following articles come from two different newspaper sub-genres: tabloids (The Sun and The Daily Mirror) and a broadsheet (The Times). Although all the stories refer to the same fact, their characteristics and structure are not so similar. The treatment of the piece of news in different kinds of newspapers varies due to the audience, tone, editor and sub-genre.

SUN READERS WILL DECIDE DATE OF EURO REFERENDUM

TONY Blair will not try to dump the Pound until The Sun's ten million readers are ready to vote Yes, a top minister said last night.

With eight out of ten readers staunchly opposed, that means Britain may NEVER join the euro.

Sreens Minister Peter Hain rejected claims that a decision to join the single currency is now inevitable.

He told The Sun: "There will be no referendum until the Chancellor has made his decision on whether it's in Britain's interests or not."

"That means it's in the economic interests of Sun readers - as well as everybody else in Britain."

Mr. Hain, a lifelong euro-sceptic, had reportedly warned that Britain's membership of the euro was inevitable.

"If we're not convinced about the euro, the Chancellor won't ask us to vote on it," he said.

"If we're not convinced about the euro, the Chancellor won't ask us to vote on it," he said.

"If we're not convinced about the euro, the Chancellor won't ask us to vote on it," he said.

EXCLUSIVE by TREVOR KAVANAGH, Political Editor

Left-wing Tribune publication, he said. "The euro is march- ing ahead, and our Prime Minister is leading us into a decision on whether or not to join can be postponed forever, apart from the right of the Tory Party."

Some of his words were missed out of a front-page newspaper version of the interview featured in The Sun.

"He will join the euro, says Hain."

But the minister insisted he was only talking about the Thirteenth, not the outcome, of a referendum.

Mr. Blair is determined not to be rushed into a poll until he is certain of overwhelming support.

And he is cautious about antagonising Sun readers who are increasingly sceptical about the euro.

He will not act until voters are convinced their jobs and mortgages would be safer in the hands of Brussels bureaucrats than in the care of the Chancellor.

And that is unlikely to happen while our unemployment and inflation rates remain among the highest in Europe.

Claims by No10 insiders that a referendum could come as early as next year are dismissed as "fantasy".

"If you don't want to be involved in anything like the exchange rate, and that shows little sign of narrowing."

Meanwhile Tory party leader says Duncan Smith yesterday blasted Mr. Hain's "stupid" statements.

Smith blamed the minister for trying to fool voters into thinking this is something they've got to do."

Peterborough, Camb, Smith, added: "I'd say to him, Duncan, if you're a man who'll do anything to get another job."
1. Once you have read the second text, in groups of two or three analyse both articles and try to differentiate their sections and their paralinguistic design. For example: the headline, the lead, …

2. Look at the macrostructure. How is the information organised? And the paragraphs?

3. Look at the topic progression: Which are the main topics? And the subtopics? Do we have information about the ‘what’, ‘who’, ‘where’, ‘when’ and ‘why’ of the fact? Does the text have lexical cohesion?

4. Look at the microstructure: How are ideas and paragraphs linked? Does the article present any reported verbs? passives? modifiers? What about the tenses employed? Does the text have grammatical cohesion?

5. What kind of vocabulary has been employed? formal? specialized? Latinate? metaphorical?

6. List the stylistic features that have been used in the texts.

Lesson 1.3: Journalese

Match the words with their synonyms:
The language of newspapers often uses buzzwords or hackneyed expressions that rarely appear in other types of writing. These are normally short and attention-getting words, colloquial expressions or even Latinate words.

From David Lieter
in Frankfurt

The final stage of the countdown to the single currency was launched yesterday when the European Central Bank revealed the first copies of the euro banknotes that will be available in 12 countries from January.

With E-Day just 123 days away and 11 billion new banknotes already printed, Wim Duisenberg, the president of the ECB, said that the "flow of history was present" as he unveiled the long-awaited denominations of banknotes. He also presented the television advertisements that will attempt to co-opt an apathetic European public to the new currency.

There was little expense spared for yesterday's ceremony, which was accompanied by a film showing the turning points in the development of the EU to the backdrop of a sweeping orchestral soundtrack.

"Ladies and gentlemen, here the euro comes," said Mr. Duisenberg as white curtains dropped from the stage behind him to reveal banners of the new banknotes and coins standing beneath a giant euro symbol, the 66-year-old Dutchman clasped a plastic star with the new notes mounted inside as 12 others, tinted with the yellow of the EU flag, descended from the ceiling.

"This is the photo of the century, I mean it's a photo of the new century," cried Manfred Kissel, the ECB's spokesman, in his role as compère.

The banknotes' security features were also shown: they include watermarks, holograms, security threads, iridescent stripes, foil patches, ink that changes colour when the notes are held at an angle, and a copyright symbol.

One of Europe's biggest logistical challenges begins in earnest tomorrow when national banks from the 12 eurozone countries begin distributing the new notes and coins to financial institutions and businesses.

By the end of the year some 15 billion banknotes and 56 billion coins will be stacked and ready for use in banks and shops from the northern tip of Finland to Crete.

"Central bankers are not expected to express emotions or to have dreams. They are supposed to dream and think about figures. But forgive me if I make an exception today because this is a moment in which the flow of history is present," Mr. Duisenberg said.

"The euro is much more than just a currency; it is a symbol of European integration in every sense of the word," added Mr. Duisenberg, who calls himself "Mr Euro" in an attempt to send out a clear message to financial markets about who is responsible for managing the new currency.

"It will help to change the way in which we think about one another as Europeans," he said, "With the new single currency, the people of Europe will have one more thing in common: their money."

"In a few months' time, on January 1, 2002, these 300 million people will for the first time be able to travel across national borders and realise that the currency people are using is the same as the one back home. Europeans will realise that they are at home throughout Europe."

The mass media campaign unveiled yesterday will include television and newspaper advertisements in all of the 12 countries, a competition for children, training courses for cash handlers, and 200 million copies of an eight-page leaflet, "Getting Ready for the Euro" to be sent to every household in the autumn.

By the end of this year the ECB will have spent 80 million (€50 million) on promoting the currency under the slogan "The Euro, Our Money". TV advertisements will start appearing across the eurozone from next month and will become more regular in October and November, when four different adverts will hit the small screen.

These are designed to cut across national borders while conjuring up specific European images. They include footage of a violinist and a flautist playing in the ruins of a Greek temple, a woman and a man performing a sultry dance in a dusty Mediterranean square, a young boy buying apples from a farmer and clubbers at a disco.

Lesson 1.4: Summary

Macrostructure:

The set of communicative purposes of news stories in Tabloids and Qualities are quite similar: basically they try to tell or narrate a fact to an audience. They only differ in the way they do so; that is to say, in the strategies they employ to achieve their purposes. Consequently, they can be considered sub-genres of the same genre: News Reports. Thus, they share the same macrostructure. Try to schematize the sections that all News Reports include, together with their functions. If necessary, look for other samples of news reports.

Lesson 2: Writing News Reports

Writing news stories for Tabloids and Broadsheets.

After having read and analysed different types of news stories, we are ready to write some samples that follow the conventions and structure of Tabloids and Broadsheets. The aim of this lesson is to put into practice the strategies and devices seen in the previous section of the unit.

AIMS:

To Write Headlines.

To Write News Reports for Tabloids.

To Write News Reports for Broadsheets.

To Create Coherent and Cohesive Stories.

To Work with Specialized Vocabulary.

METHODOLOGY:

Use of Internet and real newspapers as sources for News Reports.

Use of Editing Strategies.

Lectures and practical workshops.

MATERIALS:

1. Newspapers.
2. Internet
3. Dictionaries
4. OHP transparencies and filter pen

Lesson 2.1: Headlines; Communicative purpose.

ACTIVITY 1: Look over the readings in lesson 7 and try to fill in the following table

Headlines are very specific. They introduce the News Report but at the same time they can be considered independent texts. One of the reasons for this posture is that they are not normally written by the same journalist that writes the report. Re-read the stories in lesson 7 and analyse their structure and outstanding features. At the end of the exercise fill in the summary box provided.

1. What devices does the writer use to link a headline and a lead?
2. What kind of information and topics does the lead present?
3. What are the communicative purposes and functions of the lead?
4. What type of sentences and syntactic devices are employed?
5. Do you need to use specialised vocabulary in leads?
6. Are leads coherent and cohesive? Do they have a good closure?
Lesson 2.6: Writing Leads

ACTIVITY 6: Write leads for the headlines you created in ACTIVITY 3.

Choose four headlines from activity three and write the leads that are going to present the main ideas or facts relating to those pieces of news. Remember that the aim of the lead is to introduce the fact and establish a connection between the headline and the body of the news report. You can also write the name of the reporter at the beginning of the lead.
Lesson 2.7: Writing News Reports

ACTIVITY 7: Write the layout of a news report.
Following the Macrostructure of a piece of news, fill in the table with the main ideas you are going to include in the different sections. Then, decide the number of paragraphs you need in each section and how you are going to establish links between paragraphs. When you are ready, write the news report on a transparency paper, so that you can show it to the rest of the class.

Lesson 3: News Reports on the Air.

Reporting News Stories through Radio and Television

Radio and Television bestow on News Reporting their own constraints and framework. Oral reports are characterized by its immediate, brief, and perishable nature. In Radio and Television news detailing and further expansion are substituted by connections on site, reports by special correspondents or commentaries by specialists. Moreover, if we make comparisons between the Radio and Television media we can come across many formal differences; most of them based on the difference of medium. Television can count with visual aids, whereas Radio reporters have to overcome this “deficiency” by means of aural devices such as: intonation, rhythm, emphasis, voice, music, silences, etc.

AIMS:
To Listen to News Reports from Radio Programmes.
To Listen to News Reports from TV.
To analyse the vocabulary and content of News Reports.
To analyse the syntax of News Reports.
To analyse the structure of News Reports.
To look at different types of News Reports.
To report News on the Air.

METHODOLOGY:
Use of Internet and real programmes as sources for News Reports.
Analysis of the texts by means of successive approaches.
Lectures and practical workshops.

MATERIALS:
4. Radio and TV recordings
5. Internet
6. OHP transparencies and filter pens.

Lesson 3.1: Listening to the Content of News

ACTIVITY 1: Listen twice and try to answer the following questions.

a) What was Monica's post at the White House?

b) What did Mrs. Clinton tell NBC News about the allegations?

c) What's the most important thing for Mrs. Clinton now?

d) What is the Prime Minister to do this evening?

e) Who was arrested? Why?

f) Why have 19 officers' houses been raided?

g) What is the Queen Mother recovering from?

h) Why are the Police in Sussex linking the murder of two women?
Lesson 3.2: Analysing the Macrostructure.

ACTIVITY 2: Listen to it again and focus on the format of the News stories.

a) Is there a proper Introduction? Is it typical from this type of discourse?

b) What is included in the middle section?

c) Can we distinguish sub-sections? How?

d) Describe the structure of one of these sub-sections.

e) Is there a proper Conclusion? Is it typical of this type of discourse?

f) How do they signpost the Introduction and the Conclusion? What about the different sub-sections?

Lesson 3.3: Analysing the Language employed.

ACTIVITY 2: Listen to it again and focus on the lexicon and formality of the language.

a) Are they using formal or informal language?

b) Would you compare it to a Tabloid or a Quality press type of News?

c) The Tone: Is it a subjective discourse?

d) Can you spot any colloquialisms?

e) Do they use the tenses that are appropriate to this context?

f) Do presenters employ Verbal Mannerisms?

g) Is the language employed here similar to the one we used when writing News Reports?

Lesson 3.4: Theme development

ACTIVITY 4: Theme Development: Analyse themes and topics in two of the reports: textual synonyms, structure, order of information, links, etc.

The Prime Minister has to hold a series of meetings with the participants in the Northern Ireland Peace Talks this evening. The negotiating teams have been discussing the future of the province for second day in Lancaster House in London.

Police in Sussex are linking the murder of a pensioner in Hastings with the death of another woman in the town last week. Women lived 100 yards apart and both died in fires that had been started deliberately at their homes. The second victim had also been strangled.
Lesson 3.5: Theme development

ACTIVITY 4: Discussion.
At home or at the laboratory watch a News Programme. Afterwards, in groups try to summarize the main characteristics of News Reports and also spot the characteristics which are due to the media employed (TV, RADIO OR NEWSPAPERS).

Lesson 3.6: Useful Vocabulary for Radio.

Cue/Q: music cue, commercial cue

Music Theme: Music selected exclusively for a specific programme.

Heading: Today's headings. The headlines of the News.

Transition: The music or sound used to indicate a change from one scene to another.

Waterfall: Before the current sound fades out, the next sound begins artful volume.

Tone: The attitude the author has toward the story subject as reflected in the story.

Ambient Sound: Background noise or sound, usually used to establish setting.

Fade: A decrease in volume.

Fade in: An increase in volume from zero to a specified volume level.

Fade out: A decrease in volume to zero.

Fade to Black: One sound fades completely out and is followed by a period of silence, then the next sound begins to fade in.

Foreshadowing: A suggestion or hint in a story that something is about to happen. It is put there by the author to indicate an event to come.
