LOTUS THE WELL-BELOVED.

1. President Hénault, remarking on royal surnames of honor how difficult it often is to ascertain not only why, but even when, they were conferred, takes occasion, in his sleek official way, to make a philosophical reflection. "The surname of Bien-aime (Well-beloved)," says he, "which Louis XV. bears, will not leave posterity in the same doubt. This prince, in the year 1744, while hastening from one end of his kingdom to the other, and suspending his conquests in Flanders that he might fly to the assistance of Alsace, was arrested at Metz by a malady which threatened to cut short his days. At the news of this, Paris, all in terror, seemed a city taken by storm; the churches resounded with supplications and groans; the prayers of priests and people were every moment interrupted by their sobs; and it was from an interest so dear and tender that this surname of Bien-aimé fashioned itself—a title higher still than all the rest which this great prince has earned.”

2. So stands it written, in lasting memorial of that year 1744. Thirty other years have come and gone, and “this great prince” again lies sick; but in how altered circumstances now! Churches resound not with excessive groanings; Paris is stoically calm; sobs interrupt no prayers, for indeed none are offered, except priests’ litanies, read or chanted at fixed money-rate per hour, which are not liable to interruption. The shepherd of the people has been carried home from Little Trianon, heavy of heart, and been put to bed in his own château of Versailles: the flock knows it, and heeds it not. At most, in the immeasurable tide of French speech (which ceases not day after day, and only ebbs toward the short hours of night), may this of the royal sickness emerge from time to time as an article of news. Bets are doubtless depending; nay, some people “express themselves loudly in the streets.” But for the rest, on green field and steepled city, the May sun shines out, the May evening fades, and men ply their useful or useless business as if no Louis lay in danger.

3. Dame Dubarry, indeed, might pray, if she had a talent for it; Duke d’Aiguillon too, Maupeou and the Parlement Maupeou; these, as they sit in their high places, with France harnessed under their feet, know well on what basis they continue there. Look to it, D’Aiguillon, sharply, as thou didst, from the mill of St. Cast, on Quiberon and the invading English; thou, “covered, if not with glory, yet with meal!” Fortune was ever accounted inconstant, and each dog has but his day.

4. Forlorn enough languished Duke d’Aiguillon some years ago, covered, as we said, with meal; nay, with worse. For La Chalotais, the Breton parlementeer, accused him not only of poltroonery and tyranny, but even of concussion (official plunder of money); which accusations it was easier to get “quashed” by back-stairs influences than to get answered; neither could the thoughts or even the tongues of men be tied. Thus, under disastrous eclipse, had this grand-nephew of the great Richelieu to glide about, worshipped by the world, resolute Choiseul, the abrupt proud man, distaining him, or even forgetting him. Little prospect but to glide into Gascony, to rebuild châteaux there; and die inglorious killing game!

* * * Memoirs de M. le Baron Resenval (Paris, 1805), i. 59-61.
† Arthur Young, “Travels during the Years 1787-88-89” (Bury St. Edmunds, 1793), i. 44.
However, in the year 1770, a certain young soldier, Dumouriez by name, returning from Corsica, could see "with sorrow, at Compiègne, the old king of France, on foot, with doffed hat, in sight of his army, at the side of a magnificent phaeton, doing homage to the—Dubarry." 5

5. Much lay therein! Thereby, for one thing, could D'Aiguillon postpone the rebuilding of his château, and rebuild his fortunes first. For stout Choiseul would discern in the Dubarry nothing but a wonderfully dizzened scarlet-woman, and go on his way as if she were not. Intolerable; the source of sighs, tears, of pettings and poutings, which would not end till "France" (La France, as she named her royal valet) finally mustered heart to see Choiseul; and with that "quivering in the chin (tremblement du menton)" natural in such cases, it altered out a dismissal—dismissal of his last substantial man, but pacification of his scarlet-woman. Thus D'Aiguillon rose again, and culminated. And with him there rose Maupou, the banisher of parlements, who plants you a refractory president "at Cre in Combrailles, on the top of steep rocks, inaccessible except by litters," there to consider himself. Likewise there rose Abbé Terray, dissolute financier, paying eightpence in the shilling, so that wits exclaim in some press at the play-house, "Where is Abbé Terray, that he might reduce us to two-thirds?" And so have these individuals (verily by black-art) built them a Domdaniel, or enchanted Dubarrydom—call it an Armida-palace—where they dwell pleasantly; Chancellor Maupou "playing blind-man's-buff" with the scarlet enchantress, or gallantly presenting her with dwarf negroes; and a most Christian king has unspeakable peace within doors, whatever he may have without. "My chancellor is a scoundrel; but I cannot do without him." 6

6. Beautiful Armida-palace, where the inmates live enchanted lives, lapped in soft music of adulation, waited on by the splendors of the world, which, nevertheless, hangs wondronably as by a single hair. Should the most Christian king die, or even get seriously afraid of dying? For, alas! had not the fair, haughty Chatauroux to fly, with wet checks and flaming heart, from that fever scene at Metz, long since, driven forth by sour shavelings? She hardly returned, when fever and shavelings were both swept into the background, Pompadour, too, when Damascus wounded royalty "slightly, under the fifth rib," and our drive to trianon went off futile, in shrieks and madly shaken torches, had to pack and be in readiness, yet did not go, the wound not proving poisoned. For his majesty has religious faith; believes, at least, in a devil. And now a third peril; and who knows what may be in it? For the doctors look grave, ask privily if his majesty had not the small-pox long ago, and doubt it may have been a false kind. Yes, Maupou, pucker those sinister brows of thine, and peer on it with thy malign rat-eyes; it is a questionable case. Sure only that man is mortal; that with the life of one mortal snaps irrevocably the wonderfulest talisman, and all Dubarrydom rushes off, with tumult, into infinite space; and ye, as subterranean apparitions are wont, vanish utterly, leaving only a smell of sulphur!

7. These, and what holds of these, may pray—to Beelzebub, or whoever will hear them. But from the rest of France there comes, as was said, no prayer, or one of an _opposite_ character, "expressed openly in the streets." Château or hotel, where an enlightened philosophism scrutinizes many things, is not given to prayer; neither are Rossbach victories, Terray finances, nor, say only "sixty thousand lettres de cachet" (which is Maupou's share), persuasives toward that. O Hénault! prayers? From a France smitten (by black-art) with plague after plague, and lying now, in shame and pain, with a harlot's foot on its neck, what prayer can come? Those lank scarecrows that prowl hunger-stricken through all highways and byways of French existence, will they pray? The dull millions that, in the workshop or furrow-field, grind foredine at the wheel of labor, like haltered gin horses, if blind so much the quieter?
Or they that in the Bicêtre hospital, "eight to a bed;"
lie waiting their munition? Dull are those heads of theirs, dull stagnant those hearts; to them
the great sovereign is known mainly as the great regrater of bread. If they hear of his sickness, they will answer with a dull, Tant pis pour lui, or with the question, Will he die?

8. Such a changed France have we, and a changed Louis! Changed, truly, and further than thou yet seest! To the eye of history many things in that sick-room of Louis are now visible which to the courtiers there present were invisible. For, indeed, it is well said, "In every object there is inexhaustible meaning; the eye sees in it what the eye brings means of seeing." To Newton and to Newton's dog Diamond, what a different pair of universes; while the painting on the optical retina of both was, most likely, the same! Let the reader here, in this sick-room of Louis, endeavor to look with the mind too.
9. Time was when men could (so to speak) of a given man, by nourishing and decorating him with fit applicances, to the due pitch _make_ themselves a king, almost as the bees do; and, what was still more to the purpose, lozaly obey him when made. The man so nourished and decorated, thenceforth named royal, does verily bear rule; and is said, and even thought, to be, for example, "prosecuting conquests in Flanders," when he lets himself, like luggage, be carried thither—and

Yes, will he die? that is now, for all France, the grand question and hope whereby alone the king's sickness has still some interest.
DEATH OF LOUIS XV.

no light luggage—covering miles of road. For he has his unblushing Chateauroux, with her bandboxes and rouge-pots, at his side, so that at every new station a wooden gallery must be run up between their lodgings. He has not only his maison bouche, and valetaille without end, but his very troop of players, with their pasteboard coulisses, thunder-barrels, their kettles, fiddles, stage wardrobes, portable larders (and chaffering and quarreling enough)—all mounted in wagons, tumbrils, second-hand chaises—sufficient, not to conquer Flanders, but the patience of the world. With such a flood of loud-jingling, nevertheles,s it was and had been inevitable, not unnatural. Man is a most fictile, not fixed, not fathomable! An unsearchable some what, which is not we; which we can work with, and live amidst, and model miraculously in our miraculous being, and name world. But if the very rocks and rivers (as metaphysic teaches) are, in strict language, made by those outward senses of ours, how much more, by the inward sense, are all phenomena of the spiritual kind; dignities, authorities, holies, unholies! Which inward sense, moreover, is not permanent, like the outward ones, but forever growing and changing. Does not the black African take of sticks and old clothes (say, exported Monmouth street cast clothes) what will suffice, and of these, cunningly combining them, fabricate for himself an idolon (idol, or thing seen), and name it Mumbo Jumbo! which he can thenceforth pray to, with upturned, awe-struck eye, not without hope? The white European mocks, but ought rather to consider, and see whether he, at home, could not do the like a little more wisely.

11. So it was, we say, in those conquests of Flanders, thirty years ago; but so it no longer is. Alas! much more lies sick than poor Louis; not the French king only, but the French kingship; this, too, after long, rough tear and wear, is breaking down. The world is all so changed; so much that seemed vigorous has sunk decrepit, so much that was not is beginning to be! Borne over the Atlantic, to the closing ear of Louis, king by the grace of God, what sounds are these, muffled, ominous, new in our centuries? Boston harbor is black with unexpected tea. Behold a Pennsylvanian congress gather; and ere long, on Bunker Hill, democracy announcing, in rifle volleys death-winged, under her star banner, to the tune of Yankee-doodle-doo, that she is born, and, whirlwind-like, will envelop the whole world!

12. Sovereigns die, and sovereignties; how all dies, and is for a time only—is a "time-phantasm, yet reckons itself real!" The Morovingian kings, slowly wending on their bullock-carts through the streets of Paris, with their long hair flowing, have all wended slowly on—into eternity. Charlemagne sleeps at Salzburg, with truncheon grounded, only fable expecting that he will awaken. Charles the Hammer, Pepin Bow-legged, where now is their eye of menace, their voice of command? Rollo and his shaggy Northmen cover not the Seine with ships, but have sailed off on a longer voyage. The hair of Tow-head (Tête d'étoupes) now needs no combing; Iron-cutter (Taillefer) cannot cut a cobweb; shrill Fredegonda, shrill Brunhilda, have had out their hot life-scold, and lie silent, their hot life-frenzy cooled. Neither from that black Tower de Nesle descends now darkling the doomed gallant, in his sack, to the Seine waters, plunging into night; for Dame de Nesle now cares not for this world's gallantry, heeds not this world's scandal; Dame de Nesle is herself gone into night. They are all gone; sunk—down, down, with the tumult they made; and the rolling and the trampling of ever new generations passes over them; and they hear it not any more forever.

13. And yet, withal, has there not been realized somewhat? Consider (to go no further) these strong stone edifices, and what they hold! Mud-town of the borderers (Lutetia, Parisiorum or Barisiorum) has paved itself, has spread over all the Seine islands, and far and wide on each bank, and become city of Paris, sometimes boasting to be "Athens of Europe," and even "Capital of the universe." Stone towers brown aloft, long-lasting, grim with a thousand years. Cathedrals are there, and a creed (or memory of a creed) in them; palaces, and a state and law. Thou seest the smoke-vapor, extinguished breath as of a thing living. Labor's thousand hammers ring on her anvils; also a more miraculous labor works noiselessly, not with the hand but with the thought. How have cunning workmen in all crafts, with their cunning head and right hand, tamed the four elements to be their ministers; yoking the winds to their seachariot, making the very stars their nautical time-piece; and written and collected a Bibliothèque du Roi, among whose books is the Hebrew book! A wondrous race of creatures! These have been realized, and what of skill is in these. Call not the past time, with all its confused wretchedness, a lost one.

14. Observe, however, that of man's whole terrestrial possessions and attainments, unspeakably the noblest are his symbols, divine or divine-seeming, under which he marches and fights, with victorious assurance, in this life-battle—what we can call his realized ideals. Of which realized ideals, omitting the rest, consider only these two—his church, or spiritual guidance; his kingship, or temporal one. The church—what a word was there, richer than Golconda and the treasures of the world! In the heart of the remotest mountains rises the little kirk, the dead all slumbering round it, under their white memorial-stones, "in hope of a happy resurrection." Dull wert thou, O reader, if never in any hour (say of moaning midnight, when such kirk hung spectral in the sky, and being was as if swallowed up of darkness) it spoke to thee—things unspeakable, that went into thy soul's soul. Strong was he that had a church, what we can call a church; he stood thereby, though "in the center of immensities, in the conflux of eter-

nities," yet man-like toward God and man; the vague, shoreless universe had become for him a firm city and dwelling which he knew. Such virtue was in belief, in these words, well spoken—\textit{I believe}. Well might men prize their credo, and raise stateliest temples for it, and reverend hierarchies, and give it the tithe of their substance; it was worth living for and dying for.

15. Neither was that an inconsiderable moment when wild armed men first raised their strongest aloft on the buckler-throne, and, with clanging armor and hearts, said solemnly, \textit{Be thou our acknowledged strongest!} In such acknowledged strongest (well named king, könning, can-ning, or man that was able) what a symbol shone now for them, significant with the destinies of the world! A symbol of true guidance in return for loving obedience; properly, if he knew it, the prime want of man. A symbol which might be called sacred, for is there not in reverence for what is better than we an indestructible sacredness? On which ground, too, it was well said there lay in the acknowledged strongest a divine right; as lay in the acknowledged strongest a divine right; as surely there might in the strongest, whether acknowledged or not, considering who it was that made him strong. And so, in the midst of confusions and utterable incongruities (as all growth is confused), did this of royalty, with loyalty enrouining it, spring up, and grow mysteriously, subduing and assimilating, and grow mysteriously, subduing and assimilating, and grow mysteriously, subduing and assimilating, and grow mysteriously, subduing and assimilating, and grow mysteriously, subduing and assimilating, and grow mysteriously, subduing and assimilating.

for example, could answer the expostulatory magistrate with his "\textit{L'état c'est moi} (The state? I am the state)," and be replied to by silence and abashed looks. So far had accident and forethought—had your Louis Elevenths, with the leaden Virgin in their hat-band, and torture-wheels and conical oubliettes (man-eating!) under their feet; your Henri Fourths, with their prophesied social millennium, "when every peasant should have his fowl in the pot," and, on the whole, the fertility of this most fertile existence (named of good and evil)—brought it in the matter of the kingship. Wondrous! Concerning which may we not again say that in the huge mass of evil, as it rolls and swells, there is ever some good working imprisoned—working toward deliverance and triumph?

16. How such ideals do realize themselves, and grow wondrously from amid the incongruous, ever fluctuating chaos of the actual! this is what world-history, if it teach anything, has to teach us. How they grow, and, after long, stormy growth, bloom out mature, supreme; then quickly (for the blossom is brief) fall into decay, sorrowfully dwindle, and crumble down, or rush down, noisily or noiselessly disappearing! The blossom is so brief, as of some centennial cactus flower, which, after a century of waiting, shines out for hours! Thus, from the day when rough Clovis, in the Champ de Mars, in sight of his whole army, had to cleave retributively the head of that rough Frank, with sudden battle axe, and the fierce words, "It was thus thou clavest the vase" (St. Remi's and mine) "at Soissons," forward to Louis the Grand— and his L'état c'est moi, we count some twelve hundred years; and now this the very next Louis is dying, and so much dying with him! Nay, thus too, if Catholicism, with and against feudalism (but not against nature and her bounty), gave us English a Shakespeare and era of Shakespeare, and so produced a blossom of Catholicism, it was not till Catholicism itself, so far as law could abolish it, had been abolished here.

17. But of those decadent ages in which no ideal either grows or blossoms? When belief and loyalty have passed away, and only the cant and false echo of them remains; and all solemnity has become pageantry; and the creed of persons in authority has become one of two things, an imbecility or a Machiavelism? Alas! of these ages, world-history can take no notice; they have to become compressed more and more, and finally suppressed in the annals of mankind: blotted out as spurious, which indeed they are. Hapless ages, wherein, if ever in any, it is an unhappiness to be born! To be born, and to learn only, by every tradition and example, that God's universe is Belial's and a lie; and "the Supreme Quack" the hierarch of men! In which mournfullest faith, nevertheless, do we not see whole generations (two, and sometimes even three successively) live— what they call living—and vanish, without chance of reappearance?

18. In such a decadent age, or one fast verging that way, had our poor Louis been born. Grant, also, that if the French kingship had not, by course of nature, long to live, he of all men was the man to accelerate nature. The blossom of French royalty, cactus-like, has accordingly made an astonishing progress. In those Metz days, it was still standing with all its petals, though bedimmed by Orleans regents and roulé ministers of cardinals; but now, in 1774, we behold it bald, and the virtue nigh gone out of it.

19. Disastrous, indeed, does it look with those same "realized ideals," one and all! The church, which in its palmy season, seven hundred years ago, could make an emperor wait barefoot, in penance shirt, three days in the snow, has for centuries seen itself decaying; reduced even to forget all purposes and enmities, and join interest with the kingship. On this younger strength it would fain stay its decrepitude, and these two will henceforth stand and fall together. Alas! the Sorbonne still sits there, in its old mansion; but mumbles only jargon of dotage, and no longer leads the consciences of men. Not the Sorbonne; it is encyclopédies, philosophie, and who knows what nameless innumerable multitude of ready writers, profane singers, romancers, players, disputators, and pamphleteers, that now form the spiritual guidance of the world. The world's practical guidance, too, is lost, or has glided into the same miscellaneous hands. Who is it that the king (able-man, named also roi, rex, or director) now guides? His own huntsmen and prickers. When there is to be no hunt, it is well said, "Le roi ne fem rien (To-day his majesty will do nothing)\textsuperscript{*}
He lives and lingers there, because he is living there and none has yet laid hands on him.

20. The nobles, in like manner, have nearly ceased either to guide or misguide; and are now, as their master is, little more than ornamental figures. It is long since they have done with butchering one another or their king. The workers, protected, encouraged by majesty, have ages ago built walled towns, and there ply their craft; will permit no robber baron to "live by the saddle," but maintain a gallows to prevent it. Ever since that period of the "fronde," the noble has changed his fighting sword into a court rapier; and now loyally attends his king as ministering satellite; divides the spoil, not now by violence and murder, but by soliciting and finesse. These men call themselves supports of the throne; singular gilt-pasteboard carvatures in that singular edifice! For the rest, their privileges every way are now much curtailed. That law authorizing a seigneur, as he returned from hunting, to kill not more than two serfs, and refresh his feet in their warm blood and bowels, has fallen into perfect desuetude, and even into incredibility; for if Deputy Laponle can believe in it, and call for the abrogation of it, so cannot we.\textsuperscript{1} No Charolois, for these last fifty years, though never so fond of shooting, has been in use to bring down slaters and plumbers, and see them roll from their roofs;\textsuperscript{2} but contents himself with partridges and grouse. Close viewed, their industry and function is that of dressing gracefully and eating sumptuously. As for their debauchery and depravity, it is, perhaps, unexampled since the era of Tiberius and Commodus. Nevertheless, one has still partly a feeling with the lady Maréchale: \textit{"Depend upon it, sir, God thinks twice before damning a man of that quality."}\textsuperscript{3} These people, of old, surely had virtues, uses, or they could not have been there. Nay, one virtue they are still required to have (for mortal man cannot live without a conscience), the virtue of perfect readiness to fight duels.

21. Such are the shepherds of the people, and now how fares it with the flock? With the flock, as is inevitable, it fares ill, and ever worse. They are not tended, they are only regularly shorn. They are sent for to do statute labor, to pay statute taxes, to fatten battle-fields ("named bed of honor") with their bodies, in quarrels which are not theirs; their hand and toil is in every possession of man, but for themselves they have little or no possession. Untaught, uncomforted, unfed, to pine stagnantly in thick obscurcation, in squalid destitution and obstruction, this is the lot of the millions—people tallable et corvéable a merci et misericorde. In Brittany they once rose in revolt at the first introduction of pendulum clocks, thinking it had something to do and its destinies. Besides the old noblesse, originally of fighters, there is a new recognized noblesse of lawyers, whose gala-day and proud battle-day even now is. An unrecognized noblesse of commerce, powerful enough, with money in its pocket. Lastly, powerfulest of all, least recognized of all, a noblesse of literature, without steel on their thigh, without gold in their purse, but with the “grand thaumaturgic faculty of thought” in their head. French philosophism has arisen, in which little word how much do we include! Here, indeed, lies properly the cardinal symptom of the whole widespread malady. Faith is gone out, skepticism is come in. Evil abounds and accumulates; no man has faith to withstand it, to amend it, to begin by amending himself; it must even go on accumulating. While hollow languor and vacuity is the lot of the upper, and want and stagnation of the lower, and universal misery is very certain, what other thing is certain? That a lie cannot be believed! Philosophism knows only this; her other belief is mainly, that in spiritual, supernatural matters no belief is possible. Unhappy! Nay, as yet the contradiction of a lie is some kind of belief; but the lie with its contradiction once swept away, what will remain? The five unsatiated senses will remain; the sixth unsatiated sense (of vanity)—the whole demonic nature of man—will remain, hurled forth to rage blindly without rule or rein; savage itself, yet with all the tools and weapons of civilization—a spectacle new in history.

23. In such a France, as in a powder-tower, where with the gabelle. Paris requires to be cleared out periodically by the police, and the hordes of hunger-stricken vagabonds to be sent wandering again over space—for a time. “During one such periodical clearance,” says Lacretelle, “in May, 1750, the police had presumed, withal, to carry off some reputable people’s children, in the hope of extorting ransoms for them. The mothers fill the public places with cries of despair; crowds gather, get excited; so many women in distraction run about exaggerating the alarm; an absurd and horrid fable rises among the people; it is said that the doctors have ordered a great person to take baths of young human blood for the restoration of his own, all spoiled by debaucheries. Some of the rioters,” adds Lacretelle, quite coolly, “were hanged on the following days.” The police went on.* O ye poor naked wretches! and this, then, is your inarticulate cry to heaven, as of a dumb tortured animal, crying from uttermost depths of pain and debasement? Do these azure skies, like a dead crystalline vault, only reverberate the echo of it on you? Respond to it only by “hanging on the following days”? Not so; not forever! Ye are heard in heaven. And the answer, too, will come, in a horror of great darkness, and shakings of the world, and a cup of trembling which all the nations shall drink.

22. Remark, meanwhile, how from amid the wrecks and dust of this universal decay, new powers are fashioning themselves, adapted to the new time fire unquenched and now unquenchable is smoking and smoldering all round, has Louis XV. lain down to die. With Pompadourism and DuBarryism, his fleur-de-lis has been shamefully struck down in all lands and on all seas; poverty invades even the royal exchequer, and tax-farming can squeeze out no more; there is a quarrel of twenty-five years' standing with the parlement; everywhere want, dishonesty, unbelief, and hot-brained sciolists for state-physicians: it is a portentous hour.

24. Such things can the eye of history see in this sick-room of King Louis, which were invisible to the couriers there. It is twenty years, gone Christmas day, since Lord Chesterfield, summing up what he had noted of this same France, wrote and sent off by post the following words, that have become memorable: "In short, all the symptoms which I have ever met with in history, previous to great changes and revolutions in government, now exist and daily increase in France."

CHAPTER III.

VIATICUM.

25. For the present, however, the grand question with the governors of France is, shall extreme uncution, or other ghostly viaticum (to Louis, not to France), be administered? It is a deep question. For, if administered, if so much as spoken of, must not, on the very threshold of the business, with Dubarry vanish, hardly to return should Louis even recover? With her vanishes Duke d'Alguillon and company, and all their Armida-palace, as was said; chaos swallows the whole again, and there is left nothing but a smell of brimstone. But then, on the other hand, what will the dauphinois and choiseulists say? Nay, what may the royal martyr himself say, should he happen to get deadly worse, without getting delirious? For the present, he still kisses the Dubarry hand; so we, from the anteroom, can note; but afterward? Doctors' bulletins may run as they are ordered, but it is "confluent small-pox"—of which, as is whispered, too, the gatekeeper's once so buxom daughter lies ill—and Louis XV. is not a man to be trifled with in his viaticum. Was he not wont to catechise his very girls in the parc-aux-cerfs, and pray with and for them, that they might preserve their—orthodoxy? A strange fact, not an unexampled one; for there is no animal so strange as man.

26. For the moment, indeed, it were all well, could Archbishop Beaumont but be prevailed upon—to wink with one eye! Alas, Beaumont would himself so fain do it; for, singular to tell, the church, too, and whole posthumous hope of Jesuitism, now hangs by the apron of this same unmentionable woman. But then, "the force of public opinion?" Rigorous Christophe de Beaumont, who has spent his life in persecuting hysterical Jansenists and incredulous non-confessors, or even their dead bodies, if no better might be—how shall he now open heaven's gate, and give absolution with the corpus delicti still under his nose? Our grand-almoner, Roche-Aymon, for his part, will not haggle with a royal sinner about turning of the key; but there are other churchmen, there is a king's confessor, foolish Abbé Mondon, and fanaticism and decency are not yet extinct. On the whole, what is to be done? The doors can be well watched, the medical bulletin adjusted, and much, as usual, be hoped for from time and chance.

27. The doors are well watched, no improper figure can enter. Indeed, few wish to enter, for the patrid infection reaches even to the Cell-de-Bœuf, so that "more than fifty fall sick, and ten die." Mesdames the princesses alone wait at the leathesome sick-bed, impelled by filial piety. The three princesses, Graille, Chiffe, Coche (Rag, Snip, Pig, as he was wont to name them), are assiduous there when all have fled. The fourth princess, Loque (Dul), as we guess, is already in the nurcery, and can only give her orisons. Poor Graille and sisterhood, they have never known a father; such is the hard bargain grandeur must make. Scarcely at the door (when royalty took off its boots) could they snatch up their enormous hoops, gird the long train round their waists, huddle on their black cloaks of taffeta up to the very chin; and so, in fit appearance of full dress, "every evening at six," walk majestically in, receive their royal kiss on the brow, and then walk majestically out again, to embroidery, small scandal, prayers and vacancy. If majesty came some morning, with coffee of its own making, and swallowed it with them hastily while the dogs were uncoupling for the hunt, it was received as a grace of heaven. Poor, withered, ancient women! In the wild tossings that yet await your fragile existence, before it be crushed and broken; as ye fly through hostile countries, over tempestuous seas, are almost taken by the Turks; and wholly, in the sansculottic earthquake, know not your right hand from your left, be this always an assured place in your remembrance, for the act was good and loving! To us, also, it is a little sunny spot in that dismal howling waste, where we hardly find another.

28. Meanwhile, what shall an impartial, prudent courtier do? In these delicate circumstances, while not only death or life, but even sacrament or no sacrament, is a question, the skillfulest may fluster. Few are so happy as the Duke d'Orléans and the Prince de Condé, who can themselves, with volatilite salts, attend the king's antechamber; and at the same time send their brave sons (Duke de Chartres, Egalité that is to be; Duke de Bourbon, one day Condé too, and famous among dotards) to wait upon the dauphin. With another few, it is a resolution taken; iacta est alea. Old Richelieu—when archbishop Beaumont, driven by public opinion, is at last for entering the sick-room—will twitch him by the rochet, into a recess; and there, with his old dissipated mastiff-face, and the oiliest vehemence, be seen Campan, l. 11-33.
pleading (and even, as we judge by Beaumont's change of color, prevailing) "that the king be not killed by a proposition in divinity." Duke de Fronsac, son of Richelieu, can follow his father, when the curé of Versailles whimpers something about sacraments, he will threaten to "throw him out of the window if he mention such a thing."

29. Happy these, we may say; but to the rest that hover between two opinions, is it not trying? He who would understand to what a pass Catholicism, and much else, had now got—and how the symbols of the holiest have become gambling-dice of the ban- est—must read the narrative of those things by Bes- enval, and Soulavie, and the other court newsmen of the time. He will see the Versailles galaxy all scat- tered asunder, grouped into new ever shifting con- stellations. There are nods and sagacious glances; go-betweens, silk dowagers mysteriously gliding, with smiles for this constellation, sighs for that; there is tremor, of hope or desperation, in several hearts. There is the pale, grinning shadow of death, ceremoniously ushered along by another grinning shadow, of etiquette: at intervals the growl of chapel organs, like prayer by machinery, proclaiming, as in a kind of horrid, diabolic horse laughter, Vanity of vanities, all is vanity!

30. Poor Louis! With these it is a hollow phan- tasmagory, where like mimes they mope and mowl, and utter false sounds for hire; but with thee it is frightful earnest.

Frightful to all men is death, from of old named King of Terrors. Our little compact home of an ex- istence, where we dwell complaining, yet as in a home, is passing, in dark agonies, into an unknown of sep- aration, foreignness, unconditioned possibility. The heathen emperor asks of his soul, Into what places art thou now departing? The Catholic king must answer, To the judgment-bar of the most high God! Yes, it is a summing-up of life; a final settling and giving-in the "account of the deeds done in the body;" they are done now, and lie there unalterable, and do bear their fruits, long as eternity shall last.

31. Louis XV. had always the kingliest abhorrence of death. Unlike that praying Duke of Orleans, Egalité's grandfather—for, indeed, several of them had a touch of madness—who honestly believed that there was no death! He, if the court newsmen can be believed, started up once on a time, glowing with sulphurous contempt and indignation on his poor secretary, who had stumbled on the words, feu roi d'Espagne (the late king of Spain): "Feu roi, mon- sieur?" "Monseigneur," hastily answered the trem- bling but adroit man of business, "c'est une titre qu'ils prennent (tis a title they take).* Louis, we say, was not so happy; but he did what he could. He would not suffer death to be spoken of; avoided the sight of churchyards, funereal monuments, and whatsoever could bring it to mind. It is the resource of the ostrich, who, hard hunted, sticks his foolish head in the ground, and would fain forget that his foolish unseeing body is not unseen too. Or, sometimes, with a spasmodic antagonism, significant of the same thing, and of more, he would go—or stopping his court carriages, would send—into churchyards, and ask "how many new graves there were to-day," though it gave his poor Pompadour the disagreeablest qualms. We can figure the thought of Louis that day, when, all royally caparisoned for hunting, he met, at some sudden turning in the wood of Senart, a ragged peasant with a coffin: "For whom?" It was for a poor brother slave, whom majesty had sometimes noticed slaving in those quarters. "What did he die of?" "Of hunger." The king gave his steed the spur.

32. But figure his thought when death is now clutching at his own heart-strings, unchecked, inexorable! Yes, poor Louis, death has found thee. No palace-walls or life-guards, gorgeous tapestries or gilt buckram of stiffest ceremonial, could keep him out; but he is here, here at thy very life-breath, and will extinguish it. Thou, whose whole existence hitherto was a chimera and scenic show, at length becometh a reality; sumptuous Versailles bursts asunder, like a dream, into void immensity; time is done, and all the scaffolding of time falls wrecked with hideous clangor round thy soul; the pale kingdoms yawn open; there must thou enter naked, all unking’d, and await what is appointed thee! Unhappy man, there as thou turnest, in dull agony, on thy bed of weariness, what a thought is thine! Purgatory and hell fire, now all too possible, in the prospect: in the retrospect, alas! what thing didst thou do that were not better undone? what mortal didst thou generously help? what sorrow hast thou mercy on? Do the "five hundred thousand" ghosts, who sank shamefully on so many battlefields from Rossbach to Quebec that thy harlot might take revenge for an epigram, crowd round thee in this hour? Thy foul harem, the curses of mothers, the tears and infamy of daughters? Miserable man! thou "hast done evil as thou couldst:" thy whole existence seems one hideous abortion and mistake of nature, the use and meaning of thee not yet known. Wert thou a fabulous griffin, devouring the works of men, daily dragging virgins to thy cave; clad also in scales that no spear would pierce, no spear but Death’s? A griffin not fabulous but real! Frightful, O Louis, seem these moments for thee. We will pry no further into the horrors of a sinner’s death-bed.

33. And yet let no meanest man lay flattering unction to his soul. Louis was a ruler, but art thou not also one? His wide France, look at it from the fixed stars (themselves not yet infinitude), is no wider than thy narrow brickfield, where thou, too, didst faithfully or didst unfaithfully. Man, "symbol of eternity imprisoned into time!" it is not thy works, which are all mortal, infinitely little, and the greatest no greater than the least, but only the spirit thou workest in, that can have worth or continuance.

34. But reflect, in any case, what a life-problem this of poor Louis, when he rose as Bien-aimé from that Metz sick-bed, really was! What son of Adam could have swayed such incoherences into coherence? Could he? Blindest fortune alone has cast him on the top of it; he swims there; can as little sway it as the drift-log sways the wind-tossed, moon-stirred Atlantic. "What have I done to be so loved?" he said then. He may say now, "What have I done to be so hated? Thou hast done nothing, poor Louis! Thy fault is properly even this, that thou didst nothing. What could poor Louis do? Abdicate and wash his hands of it, in favor of the first that would accept, other clear wisdom ... had five senses; that there were flying tables (tables volantes, which vanish through the floor to come back re-loaded), and parc-aux-cerfs.

35. Whereby, at least, we have again this historical curiosity, a human being in an original position, swimming passively, as on some boundless "mother of dead dogs," toward issues which he partly saw.

36. Doomed mortal—for is it not a doom to be solecism incarnate? A new roi fainéant, king do-nothing; but with the strangest new mayor of the palace. No bow-legged Pepin now for mayor, but that same cloud-capt, fire-breathing specter of democracy incalculable which is enveloping the world! "as Louis—then—now either this or the other private do-nothing and eat-all, such as we often see, under the name of man of pleasure, cumbering God's diligent creation for a time? Say wretcher! His life-solecisms was seen and felt of a whole scandalized world; him endless oblivion cannot engulf and swallow to endless depths—not yet for a generation or two.

37. However, be this as it will, we remark, not without interest, that "on the evening of the 4th," Dame Dubarry issued from the sick-room, with perceptible "trouble in her visage." It is the fourth

For Louis had, withal a kind of insight in him. So when a new minister of marine, or what else it might be, came announcing his new era, the scarlet-woman would hear from the lips of majesty at supper: "Yes, he spread out his ware like another, promised the most beautiful things in the world, not a thing of which will come; he does not know this region; he will see." Or again: "'Tis the twentieth time I have heard all that; France will never get a navy; I believe." How touching, also, was this: "If I were lieutenant of police, I would prohibit those Paris cabriolets."

evening of May, year of grace 1774. Such a whispering in the Cell de Beaum! Is he dying, then? What can be said is that Dubarry seems making up her packages; she sails, weeping, through her gilt boudoirs, as if taking leave. D'Aiguillon and company are near their last card; nevertheless, they will not yet throw up the game. But as for the sacramental controversy, it is, as good as settled without being mentioned; Louis sends for his Abbe Moudon in the course of next night, is confessed by him, some say for the space of "seventeen minutes," and demands the sacraments of his own accord.

38. Nay, already, in the afternoon, behold, is not this your sorceress Dubarry with the handkerchief at her eyes, mounting D'Aiguillon's chariot, rolling off in his duchess's consolatory arms? She is gone and her place knows her no more. Vanish, false sorceress, into space! Needless to hover at neighboring Ruel, for thy day is done. Shut are the royal palace gates for evermore; hardly in coming years shalt thou, under cloud of night, descend once, in black domino, like a black night-bird, and disturb the fair Antoinette's music-party in the park; all birds of paradise flying from thee, and musical wind-pipes growing mute. Thou unclean, yet unmalignant, not unpitiable thing! What a course was thine, from that first trucule-bed (in Joan of Arc's country), where thy mother bore thee, with tears, to an unnamed father, forward, through lowest subterranean depths and over highest sunlight to heights of harlotdom and rascaldom, to the guillotine axe, which shears away thy vainly whimpering head! Rest there uncursed, only buried and abolished; what else befitted thee?

39. Louis, meanwhile, is in considerable impatience for his sacraments; sends more than once to the window to see whether they are not coming. Be of comfort, Louis, what comfort thou canst; they are under way, those sacraments. Toward six in the morning they arrive. Cardinal Grand-Almoner Roche-Aymon is here in pontificals with his pyxes and his tools; he approaches the royal pillow, elevates his wafer, mutters or seems to mutter somewhat; and so (as the Abbe Georgel, in words that stick to one, expresses it) has Louis "made the amende honorable to God;" so does your Jesuit construe it. "Wa, wa," as the wild Clotaire groaned out when life was departing, "what great God is this that pulls down the strength of the strongest kings!"

40. The amende honorable, what "legal apology" you will, to God, but not, if D'Aiguillon can help it, to man. Dubarry still hovers in his mansion at Ruel; and while there is life, there is hope. Grand-Almoner Roche-Aymon, accordingly (for he seems to be in the secret), has no sooner seen his pyxes and gear repacked than he is stepping majestically forth again, as if the work were done! But king's confessor Abbe Moudon starts forward, with anxious, acridulent face, twitches him by the sleeve, whispers in his ear...
Whereupon the poor cardinal has to turn around, and declare audibly “that his majesty repents of any subjects of scandal he may have given (a pudner), and purposes, by the strength of heaven assisting him, to avoid the like—for the future!” Words listened to by Richelieu, with mastiff-face growing blacker; and answered to, aloud, “with an epithet,” —which Besenval will not repeat. Old Richelieu, conqueror of Minorca, companion of flying-table orgies, perforator of bed-room walls,* is thy day also done?

41. Alas, the chapel organs may keep going, the shrine of Sainte Geneviève be let down, and pulled up again, without effect. In the evening the whole court, with dauphin and dauphiness, assist at the chapel; priests are hoarse with chanting their “prayers of forty hours,” and the heaving bellows blow. Almost frightful! for the very heaven blackens, battering rain torrents dash, with thunder, almost drowning the organ’s voice, and electric fire-flashes make the very flambeaux on the altar pale. So that the most, as we are told, retired when it was over, with hurried steps, “in a state of meditation, (recueillement),” and said little or nothing. †

42. So it has lasted for the better half of a fortnight, the Dubarry gone almost a week. Besenval says all the world was getting impatient que cela finit; that poor Louis would have done with it. It is now the 10th of May, 1774. He will soon have done now.

43. This tenth of May day falls into the loathsome sick-bed, but dull, unnoticed there; for they that look out of the windows are quite darkened; the cistern-wheel moves discordant on its axis; life, like a spent steed, is panting toward the goal. In their remote apartments, dauphin and dauphiness stand road-ready, all rooms and equestries booted and spurred, waiting for some signal to escape the house of pestilence. And, hark! across the Ciel-de-Bonne, what sound is that—sound “terrible and absolutely like thunder?” It is the rush of the whole court, rushing as in wager, to salute the new sovereigns: Hail to your majesties! The dauphin and dauphiness are king and queen! Overpowered with many emotions, they two fall on their knees together, and, with streaming tears, exclaim, “O God, guide us, protect us; we are too young to reign!” Too young indeed.

44. But thus, in any case, “with a sound absolutely like thunder,” has the horologe of time struck, and an old era passed away. The Louis that was, lies forsaken, a mass of abhorred clay; abandoned

"to some poor persons, and priests of the Chapelle Ardente," who make haste to put him "in two lead coffins, pouring in abundant spirits of wine." The new Louis, with his court, is rolling toward Choisy through the summer afternoon: the royal tears still flow; but a word mispronounced by Monseigneur d'Artois sets them all laughing, and they weep no more. Light mortals, how ye walk your light life-minnet over bottomless abysses, divided from you by a film!

45. For the rest, the proper authorities felt that no funeral could be too unceremonious. Besenuval himself thinks it was unceremonious enough. Two carriages containing two noblemen of the usher species and a Versailles clerical person; some score of mounted pages, some fifty palfreniers, these, with torches, but not so much as in black, start from Versailles on the second evening, with their leaden bier. At a high trot, they start, and keep up that pace. For the jibes (brocards) of those Parisians who stand planted in two rows all the way to St. Denis, and "give vent to their pleasantry, the characteristic of the nation," do not tempt one to slacken. Toward midnight the vaults of St. Denis receive their own, unwrapt by any eye of all these, if not by poor Loque, his neglected daughter's, whose nunnery is hard by.

Him they crush down, and huddle under ground, in this impatient way; him and his era of sin and tyranny and shame; for behold, a new era is come; the future all the brighter that the past was base.

46. A paradoxical philosopher, carrying to the uttermost length that aphorism of Montesquieu's, "Happy the people whose annals are tiresome," has said, "Happy the people whose annals are vacant." In which saying, mad as it looks, may there not still be found some grain of reason? For truly, as it has been written, "Silence is divine," and of heaven; so in all earthly things, too, there is a silence which is better than any speech. Consider it well, the event, the thing which can be spoken of and recorded, is not, in all cases, some disruption, some solution of continuity? Were it even a glad event, it involves change, involves loss (of active force); and so far, either in the past or the present, is an irregularity, a disease. Stillest perseverance were our blessedness; not dislocation and alteration—could they be avoided.

47. The oak grows silently in the forest a thousand years; only in the thousandth year, when the woodman arrives with his axe, is there heard an echoing through the solitudes, and the oak announces itself when, with far-sounding crash, it falls. How silent, too, was the planting of the acorn, scattered from the lap of some wandering wind! Nay, when our oak flowered, or put on its leaves (its glad events), what shout of proclamation could there be? Hardly from the most observant a word of recognition. These things befell not, they were slowly done; not in an hour, but through the flight of days. What was to be said of it? This hour seemed altogether as the last was, as the next would be.

48. It is thus everywhere that foolish rumor babbles, not of what was done, but of what was misdone or undone; and foolish history (ever, more or less, the written epitomized synopsis of rumor) knows so little that were not as well unknown—Attila invasions, Walter-the-Penniless crusades, Sicilian vespers, Thirty Years' wars; mere sin and misery; not work, but hindrance of work! For the earth, all this while, was yearly green and yellow with her kind harvests; the land of the craftsman, the mind of the thinker, rested not; and so, after all, and in spite of all, we have this so glorious, high-domed, blossoming world, concerning which poor history may well ask, with wonder, whence it came. She knows so little of it, knows so much of what obstructed it, what would have rendered it impossible. Such, nevertheless, by necessity or foolish choice, in her rule and practice; whereby that paradox, "Happy the people whose annals are vacant," is not without its true side.

49. And yet, what seems more pertinent to note here, there is a stillness, not of unobstructed growth, but of passive inertness, the symptom of imminent downfall. As victory is silent, so is defeat. Of the opposing forces the weaker has resigned itself; the stronger marches on, noiseless now, but rapid, inevitable; the fall and overturn will not be noiseless. How all grows, and has its period, even as the herbs of the fields, be it annual, centennial, millennial! All grows and dies, each by its own wondrous laws, in wondrous fashion of its own; spiritual things most wondrously of all. Inscrutable to the wisest, are these latter; not to be prophesied of or understood. If, when the oak stands proudest flourishing to the eye, you know that its heart is sound, it is not so with the man; how much less with the society, with the nation of men! Of such it may be affirmed even that the superficial aspect, that the inward feeling of full health, is generally ominous. For, indeed, it is of apoplexy, so to speak, and a plethoric, lazy habit of body, that churches, kingdoms, social institutions, oftenest die. Sad, when such institution plethorically says to itself, Take thy ease, thou hast goods laid up; like the fool of the gospel, to whom it was answered, Fool, this night thy life shall be required of thee!

50. Is it the healthy peace, or the ominous unhealthy, that rests on France for these next ten years? Of which the historian can pass lightly, without call to linger; for as yet events are not, much less performances. Time of sunniest stillness; shall we call it, what all men thought it, the new age of gold? Call it, at least, of paper; which in many ways is the succedaneum of gold. Bank-paper, whereby you can still buy when there is no gold left; book-paper, splendid with theories, philosophies, sensibilities—beautiful art, not only of revealing thought, but also of so beautifully hiding from us the want of thought! Paper is made from the rags of things that did once exist; there are endless excellences in paper. What wisest philosopher, in this halycon, uneventful period, could prophesy that there was approaching, big with darkness and confusion, the event of events? Hope ushers in a revolution, as earthquakes are preceded by bright weather. On the 5th of May, fifteen years hence, old Louis will not be sending for the sacraments; but a new Louis, his grandson, with the whole pomp of astonished, intoxicated France, will be opening the states-general.

51. D'Argental and its D'Aiguillons are gone forever. There is a young, still docile, well-intentioned king; a young, beautiful, and bountiful, well-intentioned queen; and with them all France, as it were, become young. Maupéou and his parliament have to vanish into thick night; respectable magistrates, not indifferent to the nation, were it only for having been opponents of the court, descend now unchained from their "steep rocks at Croc in Combrailles" and elsewhere, and return singing praises: the old parliament of Paris resumes its functions. Instead of a profligate, bankrupt Abbé Terray, we have now, for controller-general, a virtuous, philosophic Turgot, with a whole reformed France in his head. By whom whatsoever is wrong, in finance or otherwise, will be righted—as far as possible. Is it not as if Wisdom herself were henceforth to have seat and voice in the council of kings? Turgot has taken office, with the noblest plainness of speech to that effect; been listened to with the noblest royal trustfulness. It is true, as King Louis objects, "They say he never goes to mass;" but liberal France likes him little worse for that; liberal France answers, "The Abbé Terray always went." Philosophy sees, for the first time, a philosoph (or even a philosopher) in office; she in all things will applaudingly second him; neither will light old Maurepas obstruct, if he can easily help it.

52. Then how "sweet" are the manners; vice "losing all its deformity," becoming decent (as established things, making regulations for themselves, do); becoming almost a kind of "sweet" virtue! Intelligence so abounds, irradiated by wit and the art of conversation. Philosophy sits joyful in her glittering saloons, the dinner-guest of opulence grown ingenuous—the very nobles proud to sit by her—and preaches, lifted up over all Bastilles, a coming millennium. From far Ferney, patriarch Voltaire gives sign; veterans Diderot, D'Alembert, have lived to see this day; these, with their younger Marontels, Morellets, Chamforts, Raynals, make glad *Turgot's letter; Condorcet, "Vie de Turgot" ("Oeuvres de Condorcet," t. v.), p. 67. The date is 14th August, 1736.
the spicy board of rich ministering dowager, of philosophic farmer-general. O nights and suppers of the gods! Of a truth, the long-demonstrated will now be done; "the age of revolutions approaches" (as Jean Jacques wrote), but then of happy blessed ones. Man awakens from his long somnambulism, chases the phantasms that beleaguered and bewitched him. Behold the new morning glittering down the eastern steeps! Fly, false phantasms, from its shafts of light; let the absurd fly utterly, forsaking this lower earth forever. It is truth and astrea redux that (in the shape of philosophism) hencethrough reign. For what imaginable purpose was man made if not to be "happy?" By victorious analysis, and progress of the species, happiness enough now awaits him. Kings can become philosophers, or else philosophers kings. Let but society be once rightly constituted, by victorious analysis. The stomach that is empty shall be filled; the throat that is dry shall be wetted with wine. Labor itself shall be all one as rest, not grievous, but joyous. Wheat-fields, one would think, cannot come to grow untilled; no man made clayey or made weary thereby unless, indeed, machinery will do it? Gratuitous tailors and restaurateurs may start up at fit intervals, one as yet sees not how. But if each will, according to rule of benevolence, have a care for all, then surely no one will be uncared for. Nay, who knows but, by sufficiently victorious analysis, "human life may be indefinitely lengthened," and men get rid of death, as they have already done of the devil? We shall then be happy in spite of death and the devil. So preaches magniloquent philosophism her Redeunt Saturnia regna.

53. The prophetic song of Paris and its philosophes is audible enough in the Versailles Gli-de-Bœuf; and the Gli-de-Bœuf, intent chiefly on nearer blessedness, can answer, at worst, with a polite "Why not?" Good old cheery Maurepas is too joyful a prime minister to dash the world's joy. Sufficient for the day be its own evil. Cheery old man; he cuts his jokes, and hovers careless along, his cloak well adjusted to the wind, if so be he may please all persons. The simple young king, whom a Maurepas cannot think of troubling with business, has retired into the interior apartments, taciturn, irresolute, though with a sharpness of temper at times: he, at length, determines on a little smithwork; and so, in apprenticeship with a Sieur Gamain (whom one day he shall have little cause to bless), is learning to make locks. It appears, further, he understood geography, and could read English. Unhappy young king; his childlike trust in that foolish old Maurepas deserved another return. But friend and foe, destiny and himself, have combined to do him hurt.

54. Meanwhile the fair young queen, in her halls of state, walks like a goddess of beauty, the cynosure of all eyes; as yet misgues not with affairs, heads not the future, least of all, dreads it. Weber and Campan† have pictured her, there within the royal tapestries, in bright boudoirs, baths, peignoirs, and the grand and little toilette; with a whole brilliant world waiting obsequious on her glance; fair young daughter of time, what tings has time in store for thee? Like earth’s brightest appearance, she moves gracefully, environed with the grandeur of earth; a reality, and yet a magic vision; for, behold, shall not utter darkness swallow it? The soft young heart adopts orphans, portions meritorious maids, delights to succor the poor, such poor as come picture­quely in her way; and sets the fashion of doing it; for, as was said, benevolence has now begun reigning. In her Duchess de Polignac, in her Princess de Lamballe, she enjoys something almost like friendship; now, too, after seven long years, she has a child, and soon even a dauphin, of her own; can reckon herself, as queens go, happy in a husband.

56. Events? The grand events are but charitable feasts of morals (fétes des moeurs), with their prizes and speeches; poissarde processions to the dauphin’s cradle; above all, flirtations, their rise, progress, decline, and fall. There are snow statues raised by the poor in hard winter to a queen who has given them fuel. There are masquerades, theatricals, beautifyings of Little Trianon, purchase and repair of St. Cloud; journeyings from the summer court-elysium to the winter one. There are poutings and grudgings from the Sardinian sisters-in-law (for the princes, too, are wedded); little jealousies, which court-etiquette can moderate. Wholly the lightest-hearted, frivolous foam of existence, yet an artfully refined foam; pleasant were it not so costly, like that which mantles on the wine of Champagne!

56. Monsieur, the king’s elder brother, has set up for a kind of wit, and leans toward the philosophe side. Monseigneur d’Artois pulls the mask from a fair impertinent, fights a duel in consequence, almost drawing blood. He has breeches of a kind new in this world, a fabulous kind. “Four tall lackeys,” says Mercier, as if he had seen it, “hold him up in the air, that he may fall into the garment without vestige of wrinkle; from which rigorous incasement the same four, in the same way, and with more effort, have to deliver him at night.” This last is he who now, as a gray, time-worn man, sits desolate at Grätz;† having wound up his destiny with the three days. In such sort are poor mortals swept and shoveled to and fro.

CHAPTER II.

57. With the working people, again, it is not so well. Unlucky! For there are from twenty to twenty-five millions of them. Whom, however, we lump together into a kind of dim, compendious unity, monstrous but dim, far off, as the canaille, or more humanely, as “the masses.” Masses, indeed! and... yet, singular to say, if, with an effort of imagination, thou follow them, over broad France, into their clay hovels, into their garrets and hutchies, the masses consist all of units. Every unit of whom has his own heart and sorrows, stands covered there with his own skin, and if you prick him he will bleed.

O purple sovereignty, holiness, reverence; thou, for example, cardinal grand-almoner, with thy plush-covering of honor, who hast thy hands strengthened with dignities and moneys, and art set on thy world watch-tower solemnly, in sight of God, for such ends; what a thought, that every unit of these masses is a miraculous man, even as thou thyself art; struggling, with vision or with blindness, for his infinite kingdom (this life which he has got, once only, in the middle of eternities); with a spark of the divinity, what thou callest an immortal soul, in him!

58. Dreary, languid, do these struggle in their obscure remoteness; their heart cheerless, their diet thin. For them, in this world, rises no era of hope; hardly now in the other—if it be not hope in the gloomy rest of death, for their faith, too, is failing. Untaught, uncomfor ted, uniled! A dumb generation; their voice only an inarticulate cry; spokesman, in the king's council, in the world's forum, they have none that finds credence. At rare intervals (as now, in 1775) they will fling down their hoes and hammers, and, to the astonishment of thinking mankind, flock hither and thither, dangerous, aimless;

get the length even of Versailles. Turgot is altering the corn-trade, abrogating the absurdest corn-laws; there is death, real, or were it even "fictitious;" an indubitable scarcity of bread. And so, on the second day of May, 1775, these waste multitudes do here, at Versailles château, in wide-spread wretchedness, in sallow faces, squalor, winged raggedness, present, as in legible hieroglyphic writing, their petition of grievances. The château gates have to be shut, but the king will appear on the balcony and speak to them. They have seen the king's face; their petition of grievances has been, if not read, looked at. For answer, two of them are hanged, on a "new gallows forty feet high," and the rest driven back to their dens—for a time.

59. Clearly a difficult "point" for government, that of dealing with these masses—if, indeed, it be not rather the sole point and problem of government, and all other points mere accidental crochets, superficialities, and beatings of the wind? For, let charter-chests, use and wont, law common and special, say what they will, the masses count to so many millions of units; made, to all appearance, by God, whose earth this is declared to be. Besides, these people are not without ferocity; they have sires and indignation. Do but look what holiday old Marquis Mirabeau, the cranked old friend of men, looked on, in these same years, from his lodging, at the baths of Mont d'Or: "The savages descending in torrents from the mountains; our people ordered not to go out. The curate in surplice and stole, justice in its peruke, Marechausée, saber in hand, guarding the place, till the bagpipes can begin. The dance interrupted, in a quarter of an hour, by battle; the cries, the squealings of children, of infirm persons, and other assistants, tarring them on, as the rabble does when dogs fight; frightful men, or rather frightful wild animals, clad in jupes of coarse woolen, with large girdles of leather studded with copper nails; of gigantic stature, heightened by high wooden-clogs (sabots); rising on tiptoe to see the fight; tramping time to it; rubbing their sides with their elbows, their faces haggard (figures hâves), and covered with their long greasy hair; the upper part of the visage waxing pale, the lower distorting itself into the attempt at a cruel laugh, and a sort of ferocious impatience. And these people pay the * taille! * And you want, further, to take their salt from them! And you know not what it is you are stripping barren, or, as you call it, governing; what, by the spirit of your pen, in its cold, dastard indifference, you will fancy you can starve always with impunity; always till the catastrophe come! Ah, madame, such government by blind-man's-buff, stumbling along too far, will end in the general overturn (*culbute générale*).

60. Undoubtedly a dark feature this in an age of gold—age, at least, of paper and hope! Meanwhile, trouble us not with the prophecies, O croaking friend.

* "Memoires de Mirabeau," écrits par lui-même, par son père, son oncle, et son fils adoptif (Paris, 1845-5), II, i86.
over, it will reach a head, for the first of all gospels is this, that a lie cannot endure forever.

93. In fact, if we pierce through that rose-pink vapor of sentimentalism, philanthropy, and feast of morals, there lies behind it one of the sorriest spectacles. You might ask, What bonds that ever held a human society happily together, or held it together at all, are in force here? It is an unbelieving people; which has suppositions, hypotheses, and froth-systems of victorious analysis; and for belief, this mainly, that pleasure is pleasant. Hunger they have for all sweet things, and the law of hunger, but what other law? Within them, or over them, properly none!

63. Their king has become a king popinjay, with his Maurepas government, gyrating as the weather-cock does, blown about by every wind. Above them they see no God; or they even do not look above, except with astronomical glasses. The church, indeed, still is; but in the most submissive state; quite tamed by philosophism, in a singularly short time; for the hour was come. Some twenty years ago, your Archbishop Beaumont would not even let the poor Jansenists get buried; your Loménie Brienne (a rising man, whom we shall meet with yet) could, in the name of the clergy, insist on having the anti-Protestant laws, which condemn to death for preaching, "put in execution." And, alas, now not so much as Baron Holbach's atheism can be burnt—except as infinite abyss, overarched by habit, as by a thin earth-rind, laboriously built together? 65. But if “every man,” as it has been written, “holds confined within him a mad-man,” what must every society do—society, which in its commonest state is called “the standing miracle of this world?” Without such earth-rind of habit,” continues our author, “call it system of habits, in a word, fixed ways of acting and believing, society would not exist at all. With such it exists, better or worse. Herein, too, in this its system of habits acquired, retained how you will, lies the true law-code and constitution of a society; the only code, though an unwritten one, which it can in nowise disobey. The thing we call written code, constitution, form of government, and the like, what is it but some miniature image, and solemnly expressed summary of this unwritten code? Is, or rather, alas! is not; but only should be, and always tends to be! In which latter discrepancy lies struggle without end.” And now, we add in the same dialect, let but, by ill chance, in such ever-enduring struggle, your “thin earth-rind” be once broken! The fountains of the great deep boil forth—fire-fountains, enveloping, engulfing. Your “earth-rind” is shattered, swallowed up: instead of a green, flowery world, there is a waste wild-weltering chaos; which has again, with tumult and struggle, to make itself into a world.

66. On the other hand, be this conceded: Where thou findest a lie that is oppressing thee, extinguish it. Lies exist there only to be extinguished; they wait and cry earnestly for extinction. Think well, meanwhile, in what spirit thou wilt do it. Not with hatred, with headlong, selfish violence, but in clearness of heart, with holy zeal, gently, almost with pity. Thou wouldst not replace such extinct lie by a new lie, which a new injustice of thy own were; the parent of still other lies? Whereby the latter end of that business were worse than the beginning.

67. So, however, in this world of ours, which has both an indestructible hope in the future and an indestructible tendency to persevere as in the past, must innovation and conservation wage their perpetual conflict as they may and can. Wherein the “demonic element” that lurks in all human things may, doubtless, some once in the thousand years, get vent! But, indeed, may we not regret that such conflict, which, after all, is but like that classical one of “hate-filled Amazons with heroic youths,” and will end in embraces, should usually be so spasmodic! For conservation, strengthened by that mightiest quality in us, our indolence, sits for long ages, not victorious only, which she should be, but tyrannical, incommunicative. She holds her adversary as if annihilated: such adversary lying all the while like some buried Enceladus, who, to gain the smallest freedom, has to stir a whole Trinacria with its Atlas.

68. Wherefore, on the whole, we will honor a paper age too; an era of hope! For in this same frightful process of Enceladus revolt, when the task, on which no mortal would willingly enter, has become imperative, inevitable, is it not even a kindness of nature that she lures us forward by cheerful promises, fallacious or not, and a whole generation plunges into Erebus blackness, lighted on by an era of hope? It has been well said: "Man is based on hope; he has properly no other possession but hope; this habitation of his is named the place of hope."

CHAPTER IV.

MAUREPAS.

69. But now, among French hopes, is not that of old M. de Maurepas one of the best-grounded, who hopes that he, by dexterity, shall contrive to continue minister? Nimble old man, who, for all emergencies, has his light jest; and ever, in the worst confusion, will emerge, cork-like, unsunk! Small care to him is perfectibility, progress of the species and astrea redux; good only that a man of light wit, verging toward fourscore, can in the seat of authority feel himself important among men. Shall we call him, as haughty Châteauroux was wont of old, "M. Faquinet" (diminutive of scoundrel)? In courtier dialect, he is now named "the Nestor of France," such governing Nestor as France has.

70. At bottom, nevertheless, it might puzzle one to say where the government of France, in these days, specialty is. In that château of Versailles we have Nestor, king, queen, ministers, and clerks, with paper bundles tied in tape. But the government? For government is a thing that governs, that guides, and, if need be, compels. Visible in France there is not such a thing. Invisible, inorganic, on the other hand, there is; in philosophic saloons, in oeil-de-boeuf galleries, in the tongue of the babbler, in the pen of the pamphleteer. Her majesty appearing at the opera is applauded; she returns all radiant with joy. Anon the applause wax fainter, or threaten to cease; she is heavy of heart; the light of her face has fled. Is sovereignty some poor montgolfier, which, blown into by the popular wind, grows great and mounts, or sinks flaccid if the wind be withdrawn? France was long a "despotism tempered by epigrams," and now, it would seem, the epigrams have got the upper hand.

71. Happy were a young "Louis the Desired" to make France happy, if it did not prove too troublesome, and he only knew... hear best, claims with shrill vehemence that the monarchy be as heretofore a horn of plenty, wherefrom loyal courtiers may draw, to the just support of the throne. Let liberalism and a new era, if such is the wish, be introduced—only no earmark of the royal moneys! Which latter condition, alas! is precisely the impossible one.

72. Philosophism, as we saw, has got Turgot made controller-general, and there shall be endless reformation. Unhappily, this Turgot could continue only twenty months. With a miraculous Fortunatus's purse in his treasury, it might have lasted longer; with such purse, indeed, every French controller-general that would prosper in these days ought first to provide himself. But here, again, may we not remark the bounty of nature in regard to hope? Man after man advances confident to the Augean Man after man advances confident to the Augean Man after man advances confident to the Augean Man after man advances confident to the Augean Man after man advances confident to the Augean poor king, who had written few weeks ago, "Il n'y a que vous et moi qui aimions le peuple (There is none but you and I that has the people's interest at heart)," must write now a dismissal,* and let the French revolution accomplish itself, pacifically or not, as it can.

73. Hope, then, is deferred? Deferred—not destroyed or abated. Is not this for example, our Patriarch Voltaire, after long years of absence, revisiting Paris? With face shriveled to nothing, with "huge peruke à la Louis Quatorze, which leaves only two eyes visible, glittering like carbuncles," the old man is here.† What an outburst! Sneering Paris has suddenly grown reverent, devotional with hero-worship. Nobles have disguised themselves as tavern-waiters to obtain sight of him; the loveliest of France would lay their hair beneath his feet. "His chariot is the nucleus of a comet, whose train fills whole streets:" they crown him in the theater, with immortal vivats; finally "stifle him under roses"—for old Richelieu recommended opium in such state of the nerves, and the excessive patriarch took too much. Her majesty herself had some thought of sending for him, but was dissuaded. Let majesty consider it, nevertheless. The purport of this man's existence has been to wither up and annihilate all whereon majesty and worship for the present rests; and is it so that the world recognizes him? With apotheosis; as its prophet and speaker, who has spoken wisely the thing it so longed to say? Add only that the body of this same rose-stifled, beautified patriarch cannot get buried except by stealth. It is wholly a notable business, and France, without doubt, is big (what the Germans call "of good hope"): we shall wish her a happy birth-hour and blessed fruit.

74. Beaumarchais, too, has now winded up his law-pleadings ("Mémoires"), not without result to himself and to the world. Caron Beaumarchais (or de Beaumarchais, for he got enobled) had been born poor, but aspiring, esurient; with talents, audacity, adroitness; above all, with the talent for intrigue—a lean, but also a tough, indomitable man. Fortune and dexterity brought him to the harpsichord of Mesdames our good Princesses Loque, Gratille, and sisterhood. Still better, Paris Duvernier, the court banker, honored him with some confidence, to the length even of transactions in cash. Which confidence, however, Duvernier's heir, a person of quality, would not continue. Quite otherwise; there springs a lawsuit from it, wherein tough Beaumarchais, losing both money and repute, is, in the opinion of Judge-Reporter Goezman, of the Parlement Maupoun, and of a whole indifferent, acquiescing world, miserably beaten. In all men's opinion, only not in his own! Inspired by the indignation which makes, if not verses, satirical law-papers, the withered music-master, with a desperate heroism, takes up his lost cause in spite of the world; fights for it against reporters, parlements, and principalities, with light banter, with clear logic; adroitly, with an inexhaustible toughness and resource, like the skillfulst fencer; on whom, so skillful is he, the world now looks. Three long years it lasts, with wavering fortune. In fine, after labors comparable the twelve of Hercules, our unconquerable Caron triumphs—regains his lawsuit and lawsuits, strips Reporter Goezman of the judicial ermine, covering him with a perpetual garment of obloquy instead; and in regard to the Parlement Maupou (which he has helped to extinguish),蚤parlements of all kinds, and to French justice generally given rise to endless reflections in the minds of men. Thus has Beaumarchais, like a lean French Hercules, ventured down, driven by destiny, into the netherking doms, and victoriously tamed hell-dogs there. He also is henceforth among the notabilities of his generation.

CHAPTER V.

ASTRÆA REDUX WITHOUT CASH.

75. Observe, however, beyond the Atlantic, has not the new day verily dawned? Democracy, as we said, is born; storm-girt, is struggling for life and victory. A sympathetic France rejoices over the rights of man: in all saloons it is said, What a spectacle! Now, too, behold our Deane, our Franklin, American plenipotentiaries, here in person soliciting: the sons of the Saxon Puritans, with their old-Saxon temper, old-Hebrew culture, sleek Silas, sleek Benjamin, here on such errand among the light children of heathenism, monarchy, sentimentalism, and the scarlet woman. A spectacle, indeed, over which saloons may cackle joyous, though Kaiser Joseph, questioned on it, gave this answer, most unexpected from a philosophe: “Madame, the trade I live by is that of royalist (Mon métier à moi c'est d'être royaliste).”

76. So thinks light Maurepas too; but the wind of philosophism and the force of public opinion will blow him round. Best wishes, meanwhile, are sent; clandestine privateers armed. Paul Jones shall equip his Bon Homme Richard; weapons, military stores, can be smuggled over (if the English do not seize them); wherein once more Beaumarchais, dimly, as the giant smuggler, becomes visible, filling his own ank pocket withal. But surely in any case France should have a navy. For which great object were not now the time—now when that proud termagant of the seas has her hands full? It is true, an impoverished treasury cannot build ships; but the hint once given (which Beaumarchais says he gave), this and the other loyal seaport, chamber of commerce, will build and offer them. Goodly vessels bound into the waters—a Ville de Paris, leviathan of ships.

77. And now when gratuities three-deckers dance there at anchor, with streamers flying, and the eleuth-

78. Off Ushant some naval thunder is heard. In the course of which did our young prince, Duke de Chartres, “hide in the hold,” or did he materially, by actiue heroism, contribute to the victory? Alas! by a second edition we learn that there was no victory, or that English Keppel had it. Our poor young prince gets his opera plauditcs changed into mocking te-hees, and cannot become grand admiral—the source to him of woes which one may call endless.

79. Woe, also, for Ville de Paris, the leviathan of ships! English Rodney has clutched it and led it home with the rest, so successful was his new manuver of breaking the enemy’s line.”† It seems as if, according to Louis XV, “France were never to have a navy.” Brave Suffren must return from Hyder Ally and the Indian waters with small result, yet with great glory for “six” non-defeats, which, indeed, with such seconding as he had, one may reckon heroic. Let the old sea-hero rest now, honored of France, in his native Cevennes mountains; send smoke, not of gunpowder, but mere culinary smoke, through the old chimneys of the castle of Jalès, which one day, in other hands, shall have other fame. Brave Lapérouse shall be by and by lifted anchor on philanthropic voyage of discovery, for the king knows geography. But, alas! this also will not prosper: the brave navigator goes, and returns not; the seekers search far seas for him in vain. He has vanished trackless into blue immensity, and only some mournful, mysterious shadow of him hovers long in all heads and hearts.

80. Neither, while the war yet lasts, will Gibraltar surrender. Not though Crillon, Nassau-Siegen, with the ablest projectors extant, are there, and Prince Condé and Prince d'Artois have hastened to help. Wondrous leather-roofed floating batteries, set adrift by French-Spanish pacte de famille, give gallant summons, to which, nevertheless, Gibraltar answers Plutonically with mere torrents of red-hot iron, as if stone Calpe had become a throat of the pit, and utters such a doom's-blast of a blast as all men must credit.†

81. And so, with this loud explosion, the noise of war has ceased; an age of benevolence may hope, forever. Our noble volunteers of freedom have returned to be her missionaries. Lafayette, as the matchless of his time, glitters in the Versailles (Eil-de-Bœuf); has his bust set up in the Paris Hotel-de-Ville. Democracy stands impugnable, immeasurable, in her New World; has even a foot lifted toward the Old; and our French finances, little strengthened by such work, are in no healthy way.

82. What to do with the finances? This, indeed, is the great question; a small but most black weather-sympton, which no radiance of universal hope can cover. We saw Turgot cast forth from the controller-ship, with shrieks, for want of a Fortunatus's purse. As little could M. de Cluny manage the duty; or, indeed, do anything but consume his wages; attain "a place in history," where as an ineffectual shadow thou beholdest him still lingering, and let the duty manage itself. Did Genevieve Necker possess such a purse, then? He possessed banker's skill, banker's honesty; credit of all kinds, for he had written academic prize essays, struggled for India companies, given dinners to philosophes, and "realized a fortune in twenty years." He possessed, further, a taciturnity and solemnity, of depth, or else of dullness. How singular for Colneton Gibbon, false swain as he had proved—whose father, keeping most probably his own gig, "would not hear of such a union"—to find now his forsaken Demoiselle Curchod sitting in the high places of the world, as minister's grande, and "Necker not jealous!"*
A new young demoiselle, one day to be famed as a madame and a De Stael, was romping about the Decline and Fall; the Lady Necker founds hospitals, gives solemn philosophe dinner-parties, to cheer her exhausted controller-general. Strange things have happened—by clamor of philosophism, management of Marquis de Pezay, and poverty constraining even kings. And so Necker, Atlas-like, sustains the burden of the finances for five years long. Without wages, for he refused such; cheered only by public opinion, and the ministering of his noble wife. With many thoughts in him, it is hoped, which, however, he is shy of uttering. His "Compte Rendu," published by the royal permission—fresh sign of a new era—shows wonders, which but the genius of some Atlas-Necker can prevent from becoming portents? In Necker's head, too, there is a whole pacific French revolution, of its kind; and in that taciturn dull depth, or deep dullness, ambition enough.

Meanwhile, alas, his Fortunatus's purse turns out to be little other than the old "vectigal of parsimony." Nay, he too has to produce his scheme of taxing; clergy, noblesse, to be taxed; provincial assemblies, and the rest, like a mere Turgot! The expiring M. de Maurepas must gyrate one other time. Let Necker also depart, not unlamented.

Great in a private station, Necker looks on from the distance, abiding his time. "Eighty thou-pride of life! So rolls and dances the procession; steady, of firm assurance, as if it rolled on adamant and the foundations of the world; not on mere heraldic parchment, under which smolders a lake of fire. Dance on, ye foolish ones; ye sought not wisdom, neither have ye found it. Ye and your fathers have sown the wind, ye shall reap the whirlwind. Was it not, from of old, written: The wages of sin is death?

88. But at Longchamp, as elsewhere, we remark for one thing, that dame and cavalier are waited on each by a kind of human familiar, named jokel. Little elf, or imp; though young, already withered; with its withered air of premature vice, of knowingness, of completed elf-hood; useful in various emergencies. The name jokel (jockey) comes from the English, as the thing also fancies that it does. Our Anglomania, in fact, is grown considerable; prophetic of much. If France is to be free, why shall she not, now when mad war is hushed, love neighboring freedom? Cultivated men, your Dukes de Liancourt, de la Rochefoucault, admire the English constitution, the English national character; would import what of it they can.

89. Of what is lighter, especially if it be light as wind, how much easier the freightage? Non-Admiral Duke de Chartres (not yet d'Orléans or Égalité) flies to and fro across the strait, importing English fashions; this he—as hand-and-glove with an English Prince of Wales—is surely qualified to do. Carriages and saddles, top-boots and redingotes, as we call riding-coats. Nay, the very mode of riding; for now no man on a level with his age but will trot à l'Anglaise, rising in the stirrups; scornful of the old sit-fast method, in which, according to Shakespeare, "butter and eggs" go to market. Also, he can urge the servile wheels, this brave Chartres of ours; no whip in Paris is rasher and surer than the unprofessional one of monseigneur.

90. Elf jockeys we have seen, but see now real Yorkshire jockeys, and what they ride on and train—English racers for French races. These, likewise, we owe first (under the providence of the devil) to monseigneur. Prince d'Artois has, withal, the strangest horse-leech, a moon-struck, much-enduring individual of Neufchâtel in Switzerland, named Jean Paul Marat. A problematical Chevalier d'Eon, now in petticoats, now in breeches, is no less problematic in London than in Paris, and causes bets and lawsuits. Beautiful days of international communion! Swindlery and blackguardism have stretched hands across the channel and saluted mutually; on the race-course of Vincennes or Sablons, behold, in English curricles-and-four, wafted glorious among the principalities and rascalities, an English Dr. Dodd,* for whom, also, too early gallovs gapes.

91. Duke de Chartres was a young prince of great promise, as young princes often are; which promise, unfortunately, has belied itself. With the huge Orléans property, with Duke de Penthièvre for father-in-law (and now the young brother-in-law

* Adelung, "Geschichte der Menschlichen Narrheit," Lamballe killed by excesses), he will one day be the richest man in France. Meanwhile, "his hair is all falling out, his blood is quite spoiled," by early transcendentalism of debauchery. Carbuncles stud his face—dark studs on a ground of burnished copper.

A most signal failure, this young prince! The stuff prematurely burnt out of him; little left but foul smoke and ashes of expiring sensualities; what might have been thought, insight, and even conduct, gone now, or fast going, to confused darkness, broken by bewildering dazzlements; to obstreperous crotchets, to activities which you may call semi-delirious, or even semi-galvanic! Paris affects to laugh at his charioteering, but he heeds not such laughter.

92. On the other hand, what a day, not of laughter, was that when he threatened, for lucre's sake, to lay sacrilegious hands on the Palais Royal garden! The flower-parterres shall be riven up, the chestnut avenues shall fall—time-honored boscages, under which the opera hamadryads were wont to wander, not inexorable to men. Paris moans aloud. Philidor, from his Caffé de la Régence, shall no longer look on greenness; the loungers and losés of the world, where now shall they haunt? In vain is moaning. The axe glitters, the sacred groves fall crashing, for indeed monseigneur was short of money; the opera hamadryads fly with shrieks. Shriek not, ye opera hamadryads, or not as those that have no comfort. He will surround your garden with new edifices and piazzas; though narrowed, it shall be replanted, dizzened with hydraulic jets, cannon which the sun fires at noon; things bodily, things spiritual, such as man has not imagined—and in the Palais Royal shall again, and more than ever, be the sorcerer's Sabbath and Satan-at-home of our planet.

93. What will not mortals attempt? From remote Annonay in the Vivarais, the brothers Montgolfier send up their paper-dome, filled with the smoke of burnt wool. The Vivarais provincial assembly is to be prorogued this same day; Vivarais assembly-members applaud, and the shouts of congregated men. Will victorious analysis scale the very heavens, then?

94. Paris hears with eager wonder; Paris shall ere long see. From Réveillon's paper-warehouse there, in the Rue St. Antoine (a noted warehouse), the new Montgolfier air-ship launches itself. Ducks and poultry have been borne skyward, but now shall men be borne. Nay, Chemist Charles thinks of hydrogen and glazed silk. Chemist Charles will himself ascend, from the Tuileries garden, Montgolfier solemnly cutting the cord. By heaven, this Charles does also mount, he and another! Ten times ten thousand hearts go palpitating; all tongues are mute with wonder and fear—till a shout, like the voice of seas, rolls after him, on his wild way. He soars, he dwindles upward; has become a mere gleaming circle—like some Turgotine snuff-box, what we call "Turgotine-platitude," like some new daylight.

moon! Finally he descends, welcomed by the universe. Duchess Polignac, with a party, is in the Bois de Boulogne, waiting, though it is drizzly winter, the 1st of December, 1873. The whole chivalry of France, Duke de Chartres foremost, gallops to receive him.*

95. Beautiful invention, mounting heavenward, so beautifully—so unguidably! Emblem of much, and of our age of hope itself; which shall mount, specifically-light, majestically in this same manner; and hover—tumbling whither fate will. Well if it do not, Pilâtre-like, explode, and demount all the more tragically! So, riding on windbags, will men scale the empyrean.

96. Or observe Herr Doctor Mesmer, in his spacious magnetic halls. Long-stoled he walks, reverend, glancing upward, as in rapt commerce—an antique Egyptian hierophant in this new age. Soft music flits, breaking fitfully the sacred stillness. Round their magnetic mystery—which to the eye is mere tubs with water—sit breathless, rod in hand, the circles of beauty and fashion, each circle a living circular passion-flower, expecting the magnetic affluence and new-manufactured heaven-on-earth. O women, O men, great is your infidel faith! A parliamentary Duport, a Bergasse, D'Espéménil we notice there; Chemist Berthollet too—on the part of Monseigneur de Chartres.

97. Had not the Academy of Sciences, with its Baillys, Franklins, Lavoisiers, interfered! But it did interfere.* Mesmer may pocket his hard money, and

* August, 1784.
its high-priest is some Roche-Aymon, some Necklace-Cardinal Louis de Rohan. The voice of the poor, through long years, ascends inarticulate, in jacqueries, meal-mobs; low-whimpering of infinite moan, unheeded of the earth, not unheeded of heaven. Always, moreover, where the millions are wretched, there are the thousands straitened, unhappy; only the units can flourish, or say rather, be ruined the last. Industry, all noosed and halted, as if it, too, were some beast of chase for the mighty hunters of this world to bait, and cut slices from, cries passionately to these its well-paid guides and watchers, not Guide me, but, Laissez faire; leave me alone of your guidance! What market has industry in this France? For two things there may be market and demand—for the coarser kind of field-fruits, since the millions will live; for the finer kinds of luxury and spicery, of multiform taste, from opera-melodies down to racers and courtesans, since the units will be amused. It is at bottom but a mad state of things. To mend and remake all which we have, indeed, victorious analysis! Honor to victorious analysis! nevertheless, out of the workshop and laboratory, what thing was victorious analysis yet known to make? Detection of incoherences, mainly; destruction of the incoherent. From of old, doubt was but half a magician; she evokes the specters which she cannot quell. We shall have "endless vortices of froth-logic," whereon first words, and then things, are whirled and swallowed. Remark, accordingly, as acknowledged grounds of hope, at bottom mere pre-cursors of despair; this perpetual theorizing about man, the mind of man, philosophy of government, progress of the species and such-like—the main thinking furniture of every head. Time, and so many Montesquieus, Mablys, spokesmen of time, have discovered innumerable things; and now has not Jean Jacques promulgated his new evangel of a "Contrat Social," explaining the whole mystery of government, and how it is contracted and bargained for; to universal satisfaction? Theories of government? Such have been, and will be, in ages of decadence. Acknowledge them in their degree, as processes of Nature, who does nothing in vain, as steps in her great process. Meanwhile, what theory is so certain as this, that all theories, were they never so earnest, painfully elaborated, are, and, by the very conditions of them must be, incomplete, questionable, and even false? Thou shalt know that this universe is what it professes to be, an infinite one. Attempt not to swallow it, for thy logical digestion; be thankful if, skillfully planting down this and the other fixed pillar in the chaos, thou prevent its swallowing thee. That a new young generation has exchanged the skeptic creed, What shall I believe? for passionate faith in this gospel according to Jean Jacques, is a further step in the business, and betokens much. Blessed, also, is hope; and always from the beginning there was some millennium prophesied—millennium of holiness—but (what is notable) never, till this new era, any millennium of more ease and plentiful supply. In such prophesied lubberland of happiness, benevolence, and vice cured of its deformity, trust not, my friends! Man is not what one calls a happy animal, his appetite for sweet victual is so enormous. How, in this wild universe, which storms in on him, infinite, vague-menacing, shall poor man find, say not happiness, but existence, and footing to stand on, if it be not by girding himself together for continual endeavor and endurance? Woe, if in his heart there dwell no devout faith, if the word duty had lost its meaning for him! For as to this of sentimentalism, so useful for weeping with over romances and on pathetic occasions, it otherwise verily will avail nothing; nay, less. The healthy heart that said to itself, "How healthy am I!" was already fallen into the fatalest sort of disease. Is not sentimentalism twin sister to cant, if not one and the same with it? Is not cant the materia prima of the devil, from which all falsities, imbecilities, abominations, body themselves, from which no true thing can come? For cant is itself properly a double-distilled lie, the second-power of a lie.

102. And now if a whole nation fell into that? In such case, I answer, infallibly they will return out of it! For life is no cunningly-devised deception or self-deception: it is a great truth that thou art alive, that thou hast desires, necessities; neither can these subsist and satisfy themselves on delusions, but on fact. To fact, depend on it, we shall come back—to such fact, blessed or cursed, as we have wisdom for. The lowest, least blessed fact one knows of, on which necessitous mortals have ever based themselves, seems to be the primitive one of cannibalism—that I can devour thee. What if such primitive fact were precisely the one we had (with our improved methods) to revert to, and begin anew from!

CHAPTER VIII.

103. In such a practical France, let the theory of perfectibility say what it will, discontents cannot be wanting; your promised reformation is so indispensable; yet it comes not; who will begin it—with himself? Discontent with what is around us, still more with what is above us, goes on increasing; seeking ever new events.

104. Of street ballads, of epigrams that from old tempered despotism, we need not speak. Nor of manuscript newspapers (nouvelles à la main) do we speak. Bachaumont and his journeymen and followers may close those "thirty volumes of scurrilous eaves-dropping," and quit that trade; for at length, if not liberty of the press, there is license. Pamphlets can be surreptitiously vened and read in Paris, did they ever bear to be "printed at Pekin." We have a Courier de l'Europe in those years, regularly published, at London, by a De Morande, whom the guillotine has not yet devoured. There, too, an unruly Linguet, still unguillotined, when his own country has become too hot for him, and his brother advocates have cast him out can emit his hoarse wailing and "Bastille Dévoilée" (Bastille Unveiled.) Loquacious Abbé Raynal at length has his wish; sees the "Histoire Philosophique," with its "libriety," unveracity, loose, lond, eleutheromania rant (contributed they say, by philosophicon at large, though in the abbé's name and to his glory), burnt by the common hangman—and sets out on his travels as a martyr. It was the edition of 1871; perhaps the last notable book that had such fire-beatitude—the hangman discovering now that it did not serve.

105. Again, in courts of law, with their money-quarrels, divorce-cases, wheresoever a glimpse into the household-existence can be had, what indications! The parlements of Besançon and Aix ring, audible to all France, with the amours and destinies of a young Mirabeau. He, under the nurture of a "friend of men," has, in state prisons, in marching regiments, Dutch author's-garrets, and quite other scenes, "been for twenty years learning to resist despotism"—despotism of men, and, alas! also of gods. How, beneath this rose-colored veil of universal benevolence and astrosa redux, is the sanctuary of home so often a dreary void, or a dark, contentious hell-on-earth! The old friend of men has his own divorce-case, too, and at times, "his whole family but one" under lock and key. He writes much about reforming and enfranchising the world; and for his own private behoof he has needed sixty lettres-de-cachet. A man of insight, too; with resolution, even with manful principle; but in such an element, inward and outward; which he could not rule, but only madden. Edecity, rapacity—quite contrary to the finer sensibilities of the heart! Fools, that expect your verdant millennium, and nothing but love and abundance, brooks running wine, winds whispering music—with the whole ground and basis of your existence champed into a mud of sensuality which, daily growing deeper, will soon have no bottom but the abyss!

106. Or consider that unutterable business of the diamond necklace. Red-hatted Cardinal Louis de Rohan; Sicilian jail-bird Balsamo Cagliostro; milliner Dame de Lamotte, "with a face of some piquancy:" the highest church dignitaries waltzing, in Walpurgis dance, with quack-prophets, pickpurses and public women—a whole Satan's invisible world displayed; working there continually under the daylight visible one; the smoke of its torment going up forever! The throne has been brought into scandalous collision with the treadmill. Astonished Europe rings with the mystery for nine months; sees only lie unfold itself from lie; corruption among the lofty and the low, gulaesty, credulity, imbecility—strength nowhere but in the hunger. Weep, fair queen, thy first tear of unmixed wretchedness! Thy fair ñame has been tarnished by foul breath; irre- mediably while life lasts. No more shalt thou be loved and pitied by living hearts, till a new generation has been born, and thy own heart lies cold, cured of all its sorrows. The epigrams henceforth become, not sharp and bitter, but cruel, atrocious, ummentionable. On that 31st of May, 1786, a miserable Cardinal Grand-Almoner Rohan, on issuing from his Bastille, is escorted by hurrahing crowds, unloved he, and worthy of no love; but important since the court and queen are his enemies.

107. How is our bright era of hope dimmed, and the whole sky growing bleak with signs of hurricane and earthquake! It is a doomed world: gone all "obedience that made men free." Fast going the obedience that made men slaves—at least to one another. Slaves only of their own lusts they now are, and will be. Slaves of sin; inevitable also of sorrow. Behold the moldering mass of sensuality and falsehood; round which plays foolishly, itself a corrupt phosphorescence, some glimmer of sentimentality; and over all, rising, as ark of their covenant, the grim patibulary fork "forty feet high," which also is now nigh rotted. Add only that the French nation distinguishes itself among nations by the characteristic of excitability; with the good, but also with the pernicious evil, which belongs to that. Rebellion, explosion, of unknown extent is to be calculated on. There are, as Chesterfield wrote, "all the symptoms I have ever met with in history!"

108. Shall we say, then, woe to philosophism, that it destroyed religion, what it called "extinguishing the abomination (écraser l'infâme)?" Woe rather to those that made the holy an abomination, and extinguishable; woe to all men that live in such a time of world-abomination and world-destruction! Nay, answer the courtiers, it was Turgot, it was Necker, with their mad innovating; it was the queen's want of etiquette; it was he, it was she, it was that. Friends! it was every scoundrel that had lived, and quack-like pretended to be doing, and been only eating and wasting, in all provinces of life, as shoeb BX or as sovereign lord, each in his degree, from the time of Charlemagne and earlier. All this (for be sure no falsehood perishes, but is as seed sown out to grow) has been storing itself for thousands of years; and now the account-day has come. And rude will the settlement be: of wrath laid up against the day of wrath. O my brother, be not thou a quack! die rather, if thou wilt take counsel; 'tis but dying once, and thou art quit of it forever. Cursed is that trade; and bears curses, thou knowest not how, long ages after thou art departed, and the wages thou hast are all consumed; nay, as the ancient wise have written—through eternity itself, and is verily marked in the doom-book of a god!

109. Hope deferred maketh the heart sick. And yet, as we said, hope is but deferred; not abolished, not abolishable. It is very notable, and touching, how this same hope does still light onward the French nation through all its wild destinies. For we shall still find hope shining, be it for fond invitation, be it for anger and menace; as a mild heavenly light it shines; as a red conflagration it shines; burning sulphurous-blue, through darkest regions of terror, it still shines; and goes out not at all, since desperation itself is a kind of hope. Thus is our era still to be named of hope, though in the saddest sense—when there is nothing left but hope.

110. But if any one would know summarily what a Pandora's box lies there for the opening, he may see it in what by its nature is the symptom of all symptoms, the surviving literature of the period. Abbé Raynal, with his lubricity and loud, loose rant, has spoken his word; and already the fast-hastening generation responds to another. Glance at Beaumarchais's "Marriage de Figaro," which now (in 1784), after difficulty enough, has issued on the stage; and "runs its hundred nights," to the admiration of all men. By what virtue or internal vigor it so ran, the reader of our day will rather wonder—and indeed will know so much the better that it flattered some pruriency of the time, that it spoke what all were feeling, and longing to speak. Small substance in that "Figaro:" thin, wire-drawn intrigues, thin, wire-drawn sentiments and sarcasms, a thing lean, barren, yet which winds and whirls itself, as through a wholly mad universe, adroitly, with a high-sniffing air: wherein each, as was hinted, which is the grand secret, may see some image of himself, and of his own state and ways. So it runs its hundred nights, and all France runs with it; laughing applause. If the soliloquizing barber ask, "What has your lordship done to earn all this?" and can only answer, "You took the trouble to be born (Vous vous êtes donné la peine de naitre)," all men must laugh; and a gay, horse-racing, Anglomanic noblesse loudest of all. For how can small books have a great danger in them? asks the Sieur Caron, and fancies his thin epigram may be a kind of reason. Conqueror of a golden fleece, by giant smuggling; tamer of hell-dogs, in the Parlement Maupeou; and finally crowned Orpheus in the Théâtre Français, Beaumarchais has now culminated, and unites the attributes of several demi-gods. We shall meet him once again, in the course of his decline.

111. Still more significant are two books produced on the eve of the ever memorable explosion itself, and read eagerly by all the world, Saint Pierre's "Paul et Virginie," and Louvet's "Chevalier de Fau­blais." Noteworthy books, which may be considered as the last speech of old feudal France. In the first, there rises melodiously, as it were, the wall of a moribund world; everywhere wholesome nature in unequal conflict with diseased, perfidious art; cannot escape from it in the lowest hut, in the remotest island of the sea. Ruin and death must strike down the loved one; and, what is most significant of all, death even here not by necessity but by etiquette.

What a world of prurient corruption lies visible in that super-sublime of modesty! Yet, on the whole, our good Saint Pierre is musical, poetical, though most morbid: we will call his book the swan-song of old dying France.

112. Louvet's, again, let no man account musical. Truly, if this wretched "Faublas" is a death-speech, it is one under the gallows, and by a felon that does... not repent. Wretched cloaca of a book, without depth even as a cloaca! What "picture of French society" is here? Picture properly of nothing, if not of the mind that gave it out as some sort of picture. Yet symptom of much; above all, of the world that could nourish itself thereon.

BOOK THIRD.

THE PARLEMENT OF PARIS.

CHAPTER I.

DISHONORED BILLS.

113. While the unspeakable confusion is everywhere wellering within, and through so many cracks in the surface sulphur-smoke is issuing, the question arises. Through what crevice will the main explosion carry itself? Through which of the old craters of chimneys; or must it at once form a new crater for itself? In every society are such chimneys, are institutions serving as such; even Constantinople is not without its safety-valves; there, too, discontent can vent itself—in material fire; by the number of nocturnal confabulations, or of hanged bakers, the reigning power can read the signs of the times, and change course according to these.

114. We may say that this French explosion will doubtless first try all the old institutions of escape;
for by each of these there is, or at least there used to be, some communication with the interior deep; they are national institutions in virtue of that. Had they even become personal institutions, and what we can call choked up from their original uses, there, nevertheless, must the impediment be weaker than elsewhere. Through which of them, then? An observer might have guessed, Through the law parlements;
above all, through the parlement of Paris.

115. Men, though never so thickly clad in dignities, sit not inaccessible to the influences of their time;
especially men, whose life is business; who at all turns, were it even from behind judgment-seats, have come in contact with the actual workings of the world. The counselor of parlement, the president himself, who has bought his place with hard money that he might be looked up to by his fellow-creatures,
how shall he, in all philosophic soirées, and saloons of elegant culture, become notable as a friend of darle-ness? Among the Paris long-robos there may be more than one patriotic Malesherbes, whose rule is conscience and the public good; there are clearly more than one hot-headed D'Esprémond, to whose confused thought any loud reputation of the Brutus sort may seem glorious. The Lepelletiers, Lamoignons, have titles and wealth, yet, at court, are only styled "noblesse of the robe." There are Duports of deep scheme; Fréteaux, Sabatiers, of meintinent tongue—all nursed more or less on the milk of the contrat social. Nay, for the whole body, is not this patriotic opposition also a-fighting for oneself?
Awake, parlement of Paris, renew thy long warfare!
Was not the Parlement Maupeou abolished with ignominy? Not now has then to dread a Louis XIV., with the crack of his whip, and his Olympian looks;
not now a Richelieu and bastilles: no, the whole nation is behind thee. Thou, too (O heavens!), mayest become a political power; and with the shakings of thy horse-hair wig shake principalities and dynasties, like a very Jove with his ambrosial curls!

116. Light old M. de Maurepas, since the end of 1781, has been fixed in the frost of death. "Never more," said the good Louis, "shall I hear his step in the room there overhead;" his light jestings and gymnastics are at an end. No more can the importú-nate reality be hidden by pleasant wit, and to-day's evil be deftly rolled over upon to-morrow. The morrow itself has arrived; and now nothing but a solid, phlegmatic M. de Vergennes sits there, in dull matter of fact, like some dull, punctual clerk (which he originally was); admits what cannot be denied, let the remedy come whence it will. In him is no remedy, only clerk-like "dispatch of business" according to routine. The poor king, grown older, yet hardly more experienced, must himself, with such no-faculty as he has, begin governing, wherein also his queen will give help. ... for that work! To govern France were such a problem! and now it has grown well-nigh too hard to govern even the 3eil-de-
The Parlement of Paris.

Bœuf. For if a distressed people has its cry, so likewise, and more audibly, has a bereaved court. To the Cell-de-Bœuf it remains inconceivable how, in a France of such resources, the horn of plenty should run dry; did it not use to flow? Nevertheless, Necker, with his revenue of parsimony, has "suppressed above six hundred places," before the courtiers could oust him, parsimonious finance-pedant as he was. Again, a military pedant, Saint-Germain, with his Prussian maneuvers, with his Prussian notions, as if merit and not coat of arms should be the rule of promotion, has disaffected military men; the mousquetaires, with much else, are suppressed; for he, too, was one of your suppressors; and unsettling and oversetting did mere mischief—to the Cell-de-Bœuf. Complaints abound; scarcity, anxiety: it is a changed Cell-de-Bœuf. Besenval says, already in these years (1781) there was such a melancholy (such a tristesse) about court, compared with former days, as made it quite dispiriting to look upon.

117. No wonder that the Cell-de-Bœuf feels melancholy, when you are suppressing its places! Not a place can be suppressed but some purse is the lighter for it, and more than one heart the heavier; for did it not employ the working-classes too—manufacturers, male and female, of laces, essences; of pleasure generally—whoever could manufacture pleasure? Miserable economies, never felt over twenty-five millions! So, however, it goes on, and is not yet ended. Few years more and the wolf-hounds shall fall suppressed, the bear-hounds, the falconry; places shall fall, thick as autumnal leaves. Duke de Polignac demonstrates to the complete silencing of ministerial logic, that his place cannot be abolished; then gallantly, turning to the queen, surrenders it, since her majesty so wishes. Less chivalrous was Duke de Coligny, and yet not luckier. "We got into a real quarrel, Coligny and I," said King Louis; "but if he had even struck me, I could not have blamed him." In regard to such matters there can be but one opinion. Baron Besenval, with that frankness of speech which stamps the independent man, plainly assures her majesty that it is frightful (affreux); "you go to bed, and are not sure but you shall rise impoverished on the morrow: one might as well be in Turkey." It is, indeed, a dog's life.

118. How singular this perpetual distress of the royal treasury! And yet it is a thing not more incredible than undeniable. A thing mournfully true the stumbling-block on which all ministers successively stumble, and fall. Be it "want of fiscal genius," or some far other want, there is the palpablest discrepancy between revenue and expenditure; a deficit of the revenue: you must "choke (combler) the deficit," or else it will swallow you! This is the stern problem; hopeless, seemingly, as squaring of the circle. Controller Joly de Fleury, who succeeded Necker, could do nothing with it; nothing but propose loans, which were tardily filled up; impose new taxes, unproductive of money, productive of clamor and discontent. As little could Controller d'Ormes-

son do, or even less; for if Joly maintained himself beyond year and day, D'Ormesson reckons only by months: till "the king purchased Rambouillet without consulting him," which he took as a hint to withdraw. And so, toward the end of 1783, matters threatened to come to a stand-still. Vain seems human ingenuity. In vain has our newly-devised "council of finances" struggled; our intendants of finance, controller-general of finances; there are unhappily no finances to control. Fatal paralysis invades the social movement; clouds, of blindness or of blackness, envelop us: are we breaking down, then, into the black horrors of national bankruptcy?

119. Great is bankruptcy—the great bottomless gulf into which all falsehoods, public and private, do sink, disappearing; whither from the first origin of them, they were all doomed. For nature is true and not a lie. No lie you can speak or act but it will come, after longer or shorter circulation, like a bill drawn on nature's reality, and be presented there for payment—with the answer, No effects. Pity only that it often had so long a circulation; that the original forger were so seldom he who bore the final smart of it! Lies, and the burden of evil they bring, are passed on; shifted from back to back, and from rank to rank; and so land ultimately on the dumb lowest rank, who with spade and mattock, with sore heart and empty wallet, daily come in contact with reality, and can pass the cheat no further.

120. Observe, nevertheless, how, by a just compensating law, if the lie with his burden (in this confused whirlpool of society) sinks and is shifted ever downward, then in return the distress of it rises ever upward and upward. Wherby, after the long pining and semi-starvation of those twenty millions, a Duke de Coigny and his majesty came also to have their "real quarrel." Such is the law of just nature; bringing—though at long intervals, and were it only by bankruptcy—matters round again to the mark.

121. But with a Fortunatus's purse in his pocket, through what length of time might not almost any falsehood last! Your society, your household, practical or spiritual arrangement, is untrue, unjust, offensive to the eye of God and man. Nevertheless, its hearth is warm, its larder well replenished: the innumerable Swiss of heaven, with a kind of natural loyalty, gather round it; will prove, by pamphleteering, musketeering, that it is a truth; or if not an unmixed (unearthly, impossible) truth, then better, a wholesomely attempered one (as wind is to the shorn lamb), and works well. Changed outlook, however, when purse and larder grow empty! Was your arrangement so true, so accordant to nature's ways, then, how, in the name of wonder, has nature, with her infinite bounty, come to leave it famishing there? To all men, to all women, and all children, it is now indubitable that your arrangement was false. Honor to bankruptcy; ever righteous on the great scale, though in detail it is so cruel! Under all falsehoods it works, unweariedly mining. No falsehood, did it rise heaven-high and cover the world, but bankruptcy, one day, will sweep it down, and make us free of it.
CHAPTER II.

CONTROLLER CALONNE.

122. Under such circumstances of tristesse, obstruction, and sick languor, when to an exasperated court it seems as if fiscal genius had departed from among men, what apparition could be welcome than that of M. de Calonne? Calonne, a man of indisputable genius, even fiscal genius, more or less; of experience both in managing finance and parlements, for he has been intendant at Metz, at Lille; king's procureur at Douai. A man of weight, connected with the moneyed classes; of unstained name—if it were not some peccadillo (of showing a client's letter) in that old D'Aiguillon-Lachalotais business, as good as forgotten now. He has kinsmen of heavy purse, felt on the stock exchange. Our Foulons, Berthiers, intrigue for him—old Foulon, who has now nothing to do but intrigue; who is known and even seen to be what they call a scoundrel; but of unmeasured wealth; who, from commissariat clerk which he once was, may hope, some think, if the game go right, to be minister himself one day.

123. Such propping and backing has M. de Calonne! and then intrinsically such qualities! Hope radiates from his face; persuasion hangs on his tongue. For all straits he has present remedy, and will make the world roll on wheels before him. On the 3d of November, 1783, the Cell-de-Boeuf rejoices in its new controller-general. Calonne also shall have trial; Calonne, also in his way, as Turgot and Necker had done in theirs, shall forward the consummation; suffuse, with one other flush of brilliancy our now too leaden colored era of hope, and wind it up—into fulfillment.

124. Great, in any case, is the felicity of the Cell-de-Boeuf. Stinginess has fled from these royal abodes: suppression ceases; your Besenval may go peaceably to sleep, sure that he shall awake unplundered. Smiling plenty, as if conjured by some enchanter, has returned; scatters contentment from her new flowing horn. And mark what suavity of manners! A bland smile distinguishes our controller: to all men he listens with an air of interest, nay, of anticipation; makes their own wish clear to themselves, and grants it; or, at least, grants conditional promise of it. "I fear this is a matter of difficulty," said her majesty. "Madame," answered the controller, "if it is but difficult, it is done; if it is impossible, it shall be done (se fera)." A man of such "facility," withal. To observe him in the pleasure-vortex of society, which none partakes of with more gusto, you might ask, When does he work? And yet his work, as we see, is never behind-hand; above all, the fruit of his work—ready money. Truly a man of incredible facility; facile action, facile eloquence, facile thought; how, in mild suasion, philosophic depth sparkles up from him, as mere wit and lambent sprightliness; and in her majesty's soirées, with the weight of a world lying on him, he is the delight of men and women! By what magic does he accomplish miracles? By the only true magic, that of genius. Men name him "the minister;" as, indeed, when was there another such? Crooked things are became straight by him, rough places plain; and over the Ciel-de-Bœuf there rest an unspeakable sunshine.

125. Nay, in seriousness, let no man say that Calonne had not genius—genius for persuading; before all things, for borrowing. With the skillfulst judicious appliances of underhand money, he keeps the stock exchanges flourishing; so that loan after loan is filled up as soon as opened. "Calculators likely to know* have calculated that he spent, in extraordinaries, "at the rate of one million daily;" which, indeed, is some 50,000 pounds sterling; but did he not procure something with it; namely, peace and prosperity, for the time being? Philosophedom grumbles and croaks; buys, as we said, 80,000 copies of Necker's new book: but Nonpareil Calonne, in her majesty's apartment, with the glittering retinue of dukes, duchesses, and mere happy admiring faces, can let Necker and philosophedom croak.

126. The misery is, such a time cannot last! Squandering and payment by loan is no way to choke a deficit. Neither is oil the substance for quenching conflagrations—alas, no, only for assuaging them, not permanently! To the Nonpareil himself, who wanted not insight, it is clear at intervals, and dimly certain at all times, that his trade is by nature temporary, growing daily more difficult; that changes in-

* Besenval, iii. 218.
128. Let notable persons, the actual or virtual rulers of their districts, be summoned from all sides of France; let a true tale, of his majesty's patriotic purposes and wretched pecuniary impossibilities, be successively told them; and then the question put, What are we to do? Surely to adopt healing measures, such as the magic of genius will unfold; such as, once sanctioned by notables, all parlements and all men must, with more or less reluctance, submit to.

CHAPTER III.

THE NOTABLES.

129. Here, then, is verily a sign and wonder; visible to the whole world; bodeful of much. The Ceil-de-Boeuf dolorously grumbles; were we not well as we stood—quenching conflagrations by oil? Constitutional philosophedom starts with joyful surprise; stares eagerly what the result will be. The public creditor, the public debtor, the whole thinking and thoughtless public, have their several surprises, joyful or sorrowful. Count Mirabeau, who has got his matrimonial and other lawsuits huddled up, better or worse, and works now in the dimmest element at Berlin, compiling "Prussian Monarchies," pamphlets "On Cagliostro," writing, with pay, but not with honorable recognition, innumerable dispatches for his government—scents or describes richer quarry from afar. He, like an eagle or vulture, or mixture of both, preens his wings for flight homeward.*

130. M. de Calonne has stretched out an Aaron's rod over France; miraeulous; and is summoning quite unexpected things. Audacity and hope alternate in him with misgivings, though the sanguine-valiant side carries it. Anon he writes to an intimate friend, "Je me fais pitié à moi-même (I am an object of pity to myself);" anon, invites some dedicating poet or poetaster to sing "this assembly of the notables, and the revolution that is preparing."† Preparing, indeed; and a matter to be sung, only not till we have seen it, and what the issue of it is. In deep, obscure unrest, all things have so long gone rocking and swaying, will M. de Calonne, with this, his alchemy of the notables, fasten altogether again, and get new revenues? Or wrench all asunder, so that it go no longer rocking and swaying, but clashing and colliding?

131. Be this as it may, in the bleak, short days, we behold men of weight and influence threading the great vortex of French locomotion, each on his several line, from all sides of France, toward the château of Versailles, summoned thither de par le roi. There, on the 22d day of February, 1787, they have met and got installed: notables to the number of 137 as we count them name by name; add seven princes of the blood, it makes the round gross of notables.

* "Memoires de Mirabeau," t. iv. liby. 4, et c.

‡ Lauretelle, iii. 388. Montguallard, t. 547.
Men of the sword, men of the robe, peers, dignified clergy, parlementary presidents: divided into seven boards (bureaux), under our seven princes of the blood, Monsieur D'Artois, Penthèvre, and the rest, among whom let not our new Duke d'Orleans (for, since 1785 he is Chartres no longer) be forgotten. Never yet made admiral, and now turning the corner of his fortieth year, with spoiled blood and prospects, half weary of a world which is more than half weary of him, monseigneur's future is most questionable. Not in illumination and insight, not even in conflagration, but, as was said, "in dull smoke and ashes of outburnt sensualities," does he live and digest. Sumptuosity and sordidness, revenge, life-weariness, ambition, darkness, putrescence; and, say, in sterling money, 300,000 a year, were this poor prince once to burst loose from his court-moorings, to what regions, with what phenomena, might he not sail and drift? Happily, as yet, he "affects to hunt daily;" sits there, since he must sit, presiding that bureau of his, with dull moon-visage, dull, glassy eyes, as if it were a mere tedium to him.

We observe, finally, that Count Mirabeau has actually arrived. He descends from Berlin on the scene of action, glares into it with flashing sun-glance, discerns that it will do nothing for him. He had hoped these notables might need a secretary. They do need one, but have fixed on Dupont de Nemours, a man of smaller fame, but then of better, who, indeed, as his friends often hear, labors under this complaint, surely not a universal one, of having "five kings to correspond with."* The pen of a Mirabeau cannot become an official one, nevertheless it remains a pen. In defect of secretaryship, he sets to denouncing stock-brokerage (dénonciation de l'agiotage), testifying, as his wont is, by loud bruit, that he is present and busy; till, warned by friend Talleyrand, and even by Calonne himself underhand, that a "seventeenth lettre-de-cachet may be launched against him," he timefully flits over the marches.

And now, in stately royal apartments, as pictures of that time still represent them, our hundred and forty-four notables sit organized, ready to hear and consider. Controller Calonne is dreadfully behind hand with his speeches, his preparatives; however, the man's "facility of work" is known to us. For freshness of style, lucidity, ingenuity, largeness of view, that opening harangue of his was unsurpassable—had not the subject-matter been so appalling. A deficit, concerning which accounts vary—and the controller's own account is not unquestioned—but which all accounts agree in representing as "enormous." This is the epitome of our controller's difficulties; and then his means? Mere Turgotism, for thither, it seems, we must come at last: provincial assemblies, new taxation; nay, strangest of all, new land-tax, what he calls subvention territoriale, from which neither privileged nor unprivileged, noblemen, clergy, nor parlementeers, shall be exempt!

have been used to tax; levying toll, tribute, and custom, at all hands, while a penny was left—but to be themselves taxed? Of such privileged persons, meanwhile, do these notables, all but the merest fraction, consist. Headlong Calonne had given no heed to the "composition," or judicious packing of them; but chosen such notables as were really notable, trusting for the issue to off-hand ingenuity, good-fortune, and eloquence that never yet failed. Headlong controller-general! Eloquence can do much, but not all. Orpheus, with eloquence grown rhythmic, musical (what we call poetry), drew iron tears from the cheek of Pluto; but by what witchery of rhyme or prose wilt thou from the pocket of Plutus draw gold?

135. Accordingly, the storm that now rose and began to whistle round Calonne, first in these seven bureaus, and then on the outside of them, awakened by them, spreading wider and wider over all France, threatens to become unappeasable. A deficit so enormous! Mismanagement, profusion, is too clear. Peculation itself is hinted at; nay, Lafayette and others go so far as to speak it out, with attempts at proof. The blame of his deficit our brave Calonne, as was natural, had endeavored to shift from himself on his predecessors; not excepting even Necker. But now Necker vehemently denies; whereupon an "angry correspondence," which also finds its way into print.

136. In the Cel-de-Boeuf and her majesty's private apartments, an eloquent controller, with his "madame, if it is but difficult, "had been persuasive; but, alas, the cause is now carried elsewhither. Behold him, one of these sad days, in monsieur's bureau; to which all the other bureaus have sent deputies. He is standing at bay; alone; exposed to an incessant fire of questions, interpellations, objections, from these "hundred and thirty-seven" pieces of logic—what we may call bouche à feu, fire-mouthis literally! Never, according to Besenval, or hardly ever, had such display of intellect, dexterity, coolness, suasive eloquence, been made by man. To the raging play of so many fire-mouths he opposes nothing angrier than light-beams, self-possession, and fatherly smiles. With the imperturbablest bland clearness, he, for five hours long, keeps answering the incessant volley of fiery, captious questions, reproachful interpellations in words prompt as lightning, quiet as light. Nay, the cross-fire, too; such side-questions and incidental interpellations as, in the heat of the main battle, he (having only one tongue) could not get answered; these, also, he takes up, at the first stake; answers even these. Could blandest suasive eloquence have saved France, she were saved.

137. Heavy-laden controller! In the seven bureaus seems nothing but hindrance: in monsieur's bureau, a Loménie de Brinne, Archbishop of Toulouse, with an eye himself to the controllership, stirs up the clergy; there are meetings, underground intrigues. Neither from without anywhere comes sign of help or hope. For the nation (where Mirabeau is now, with stentor-lungs, "denouncing agio") the controller has hitherto done nothing, or less. For philosophedom he has done as good as nothing—sent out some scientific Lapérouse, or the like; and he is not in "angry correspondence" with its Necker? The very Ciel-de-Bœuf looks questionable; a falling controller has no friends. Solid M. de Vergennes, who with his phlegmatic, judicious punctuality might have kept down many things, died the very week before these sorrowful notables met. And now a seal-keeper, Garde-des-Sceaux, Miroménil, is thought to be playing the traitor—spinning plots for Loménie-Brienne! Queen's-Reader Abbé de Vermord, unloved individual, was Brienne's creature, the work of his hands from the first: it may be feared the back-stairs passage is open, the ground getting mined under our feet. Treacherous Garde-des-Sceaux Miroménil, at least, should be dismissed; Lamoignon, the eloquent notable, a staunch man, with connections, and even ideas, parlement-president yet intent on reforming parlements, were not he the right keeper? So, for one, thinks busy Besenval; and, at dinner-table, rounds the same into the controller's ear—who always, in the intervals of landlord-duties, listens to him as with charmed look, but answers nothing positive.*

139. "On the Monday after Easter," the 9th of April, 1787, a date one rejoices to verify, for nothing can excel the indolent falsehood of these "Histoires" and "Mémoires"—"on the Monday after Easter, as I, Besenval, was riding towards Romainville to the Maréchal de Ségur's, I met a friend on the boulevard, who told me that M. de Calonne was out. A little further on came M. the duke d'Orléans, dashing toward me, head to the wind" (trotting à l'Anglaise), "and confirmed the news."† It is true news. Treachealous Garde-des-Sceneaux Biroménill is gone, and Lamolignon is appointed in his room; but appointed for his own profit only, not for the controller's: "next day" the controller, also, has had to move. A little longer he may linger near; be seen among the money-changers, and even "working in the controller's office," where much lies unfinished; but neither will that hold. Too strong blows and beats this tempest of public opinion, of private intrigue, as from the cave of all the winds, and blows him (higher authority giving sign) out of Paris and France—over the horizon, into invisibility, or outer darkness.

140. Such destiny the magic of genius could not forever avert. Ungrateful (Eil-de-Boeuf! did he not miraculously rain gold manna on you; so that, as a courtier said, "All the world held out its hand, and I held out my hat"—for a time? Himself is poor; penniless, had not a "financier's widow in Lorraine" offered him, though he was turned of fifty, her hand and the rich purse it held. Dim, henceforth, shall be his activity, though unwearied; letters to the king, appeals, prognostications, pamphlets (from London), written with the old suasive facility, which, however, do not persuade. Luckily his widow's purse fails not. Once, in a year or two, some shadow of him shall be seen hovering on the northern border, seeking election as national deputy; but be sternly beckoned away. Dimmer, then, far-hone over utmost European lands, in uncertain twilight of diplomacy, he shall hover, intriguing for "exiled princes," and have adventures; be overset into the Rhine-stream and half-drowned, nevertheless save his papers dry. Unwearied, but in vain! In France he works miracles no more, shall hardly return thither to find a grave. Farewell, thou facile, sanguine controller-general, with thy light rash hand, thy suasive mouth of gold: worse men there have been, and better; but to thee, also, was allotted a task—of raising the wind, and the winds; and thou has done it.

141. But now, while Ex-Controller Calonne flies storm-driven over the horizon, in this singular way, what has become of the controllership? It hangs vacant, one may say extinct, like the moon in her vacant interlunar cave. Two preliminary shadows, poor M. Fourqueux, poor M. Villedieu, do hold, in quick succession, some simulacrum of it—as the new moon will sometimes shine out with a dim, preliminary old one in her arms. Be patient, ye notables! An actual new controller is certain, and even ready; were the indispensable manœuvres but gone through. Long-headed Lamolignon, with Home-Secretary Breteuil, and Foreign Secretary Montmorin have exchanged looks; let these three once meet and speak. Who is it that is strong in the queen's favor, and in the Abbé de Vermond's? That is a man of great capacity? Or, at least, that has struggled, these fifty years, to have it thought great; now, in the clergy's name, demanding to have Protestant death-penalties "put in execution," now flaunting it in the Eil-de-Boeuf, as the gayest man-pleaser and woman-pleaser, gleaning even a good word from philosophedom and your Voltaireans and D'Alemberts? That has a party ready-made for him in the notables? Loménie de Brienne, Archbishop of Toulouse! answer all the three, with the clearest instantaneous concord; and rush off to propose him to the king. "in such haste," says Besenval, "that M. de Lamoignon had to borrow a simarre," seemingly some kind of cloth apparatus necessary for that.*

142. Loménie-Brienne, who had all his life "felt a kind of predestination for the highest offices," has now, therefore, obtained them. He presides over the finances; he shall have the title of prime minister itself, and the effort of his long life be realized. Unhappy only that it took such talent and industry to gain the place, that to qualify for it hardly any talent or industry was left disposable! Looking now into his inner man, what qualification he may have, Loménie beholds, not without astonishment, next to nothing but vacuity and possibility. Principles or methods, acquirement outward or inward (for his very body is wasted, by hard tear and wear) he finds none; not so much as a plan, even an unwise one. Lucky, in these circumstances, that Calonne has had a plan! Calonne's plan was gathered from Turgot's and Nécker's by compilation, shall become Loménie's by adoption. Not in vain has Loménie studied the working of the British constitution; for he professes to have some Anglomania, of a sort. Why, in that free country, does one minister, driven out by parliament, vanish from his king's presence, and another enter, borne in by parliament?* Surely not for mere change (which is ever wasteful), but that all men may have share of what is going; and so the strife of freedom indefinitely prolong itself, and no harm be done.

143. The notables, mollified by Easter festivities, by the sacrifice of Calonne, are not in the worst humor. Already his majesty, while the "interlunar shadows" were in office, had held session of notables; and from his throne delivered promissory conciliatory eloquence: "the queen stood waiting at a window, till his carriage came back, and monsieur from afar clapped hands to her," in sign that all was well.† It has had the best effect, if such do but last. Leading notables, meanwhile, can be "caressed;" Brienne's new gloss, Lamoignon's long head, will profit somewhat; conciliatory eloquence shall not be wanting. On the whole, however, it is not undeniable that this of ousting Calonne and adopting the plans of Calonne is a measure which, to produce its best effect, should be looked at from a certain distance, cursorily; not dwell on with minute near scrutiny? In a word, that no service the notables could now do were so obliging as, in some handsome manner, to—take themselves away? Their "six propositions" about provisional assemblies, suppression of corvées and such-like, can be accepted without criticism. The subvention or land-tax, and much else, one must glide hastily over; safe nowhere but in flourishes of conciliatory eloquence. Till at length, on this 25th of May, year 1787, in solemn final session, there bursts forth what we can call an explosion of eloquence; king, Loménie, Lamoignon and retinue taking up the successive strain, in harangues to the number of ten, besides his majesty’s, which last the livelong day—whereby, as in a kind of choral anthem, or bravura peal, of thanks, praises, promises, the notables are, so to speak, organed out, and dismissed to their respective places of abode. They had sat, and talked, some nine weeks; they were the first notables since Richelieu’s, in the year 1626.

144. By some historians, sitting much at their ease in the safe distance, Loménie has been blamed for this dismissal of his notables; nevertheless, it was clearly time. There are things, as we said, which should not be dwelt on with minute close scrutiny. Over hot coals you cannot glide too fast. In these seven bureaus, where no work could be done, unless talk were work, the questionablest matters were coming up. Lafayette, for example, in Monseigneur d’Artois’s bureau, took upon him to set forth more than one deprecatory oration about lettre-de-cachet, liberty of the subject, agio, and such like, which monseigneur, endeavoring to repress, was answered that a notable being summoned to speak his opinion must speak it.*

145. Thus, to, his grace the Archbishop of Aix, perorating once, with a plaintive pulpit tone, in these words, “Tithe, that free-will offering of the pieté of Christians”—“Tithe,” interrupted Duke la Rochefoucault, with the cold business manner he has learned from the English, “that free-will offering of the pieté of Christians, on which there are now 40,000 lawsuits in this realm.” Nay, Lafayette, bound to speak his opinion, went the length, one day, of proposing to convocate a “national assembly.” “You demand states-general?” asked monseigneur, with an air of mimatory surprise. “Yes, monseigneur; and even better than that,” “Write it,” said monseigneur to the clerks;† Written accordingly it is; and, what is more, will be acted by and by.

CHAPTER IV.

LOMÉNIE’S EDICTS.

146. Thus, then, have the notables returned home, carrying to all quarters of France such notions of déficit, décadence, distraction, and that states-general will cure it, or will not cure it but kill it. Each notable, we may fancy, is as a funereal torch, disclosing hideous abysses, better left hid! The unquietest humor possesses all men, fermentis, seeks issue pamphleteering, caricaturing, projecting, declaiming—vain jangling of thought, word, and deed.

147. It is spiritual bankruptcy, long tolerated, verging now toward economical bankruptcy, and become intolerable; for, from the lowest dumb rank, the inevitable misery, as was predicted, has spread upward. In every man is some obscure feeling that his position, oppressive or else oppressed, is a false one; all men, in one or the other acid dialect, as assailants or as defenders, must give vent to the unrest that is in them. Of such stuff, national well-being, and the glory of rulers is not made. O Loménie, what a wild-heaving, waste-looking, hungry, and angry world hast thou, after life-long effort, got promoted to take charge of!

148. Loménie's first edits are mere soothing ones; creation of provincial assemblies "for apportioning the imposts," when we get any, suppression of corvées or statute labor, alleviation of gabelle, soothing measures recommended by the notables, long clamored for by all liberal men. Oil cast upon the waters has been known to ... if it were not a swell of the abating kind? There are swells that come of upper tempest and wind-gust. But, again, there are swells that come of subterranean pent wind, some say, and even of inward decomposition, of decay that has become self-combustion—as when, according to Neptuno-Plutonic geology, the world is all decayed down into due attritus of this sort, and shall now be exploded and new made! These latter abate not by oil. The fool says in his heart, How shall not tomorrow be as yesterday, as all days, which were once to-morrows? The wise man, looking on this France, moral, intellectual, economical, sees, "in short, all the symptoms he has ever met with in history," unutterable by soothing edicts.

150. Meanwhile, abate or not, cash must be had; and for that, quite another sort of edicts, namely, "bursals" or fiscal ones. How easy were fiscal edicts, did you know for certain that the parlement of Paris would what they call "register" them! Such right of registering, properly of mere writing down, the parlement has got by old want, and, though but a law court, can remonstrate, and higgle considerably about the same. Hence many quarsels, desperate Manpeou devices, and victory and defeat, a quarrel now near forty years long. Hence fiscal edicts, which otherwise were easy enough, become such problems. For example, is there not Calonne's subvention territoriale, universal, unexempting land-tax, the sheet-anchor of finance. Or, to show, so far as possible, that one is not without original finance talent. Loménie himself can devise an edit du timbre, or stamp-tax, borrowed also, it is true, but then from America. May it prove luckier in France than there!

151. France has her resources; nevertheless, it cannot be denied, the aspect of that parlement is questionable. Already among the notables, in that final symphony of dismissal, the Paris president had an ominous tone. Adrien Duport, quitting magnetic sleep, in this agitation of the world, threatens to rouse himself into preternatural wakefulness. Shallower, but also louder, there is magnetic D'Espremenil, with his tropical heat (he was born at Madras), with his dusky, confused violence, holding of illumination, animal magnetism, public opinion, Adam Weisshaupt, Harmodius, and Aristogiton, and all manner of confused, violent things, of whom can come no good. The very peerage is infected with the leaven. Our peers have, in too many cases, laid aside their frogs, laces, bag-wigs, and go about in English costume, or ride rising in their stirrups, in the most headlong manner; nothing but insubordination, eleutheromania, confused, unlimited opposition in their heads. Questionable; not to be ventured upon, if we had a Fortunatus's purse! But Loménie has waited all June, casting on the waters what oil he had; and now, betide as it may, the two finance edicts must out. On the 6th of July he forwards his proposed stamp-tax and land tax to the parliament of Paris, and, as if putting his own leg foremost, not his borrowed Calonne's-leg, places the stamp-tax first in order. Alas! the parliament will not register; the parliament demands instead a "state of the expenditure," a "state of the contemplated reductions," "states" enough, which his majesty must decline to furnish. Discussions arise, patriotic eloquence, the peers are summoned. Does the Nemean lion begin to bristle? Here, surely, is a duel, which France and the universe may look upon, with prayers, at lowest, with curiosity and bets. Paris stirs with new animation. The outer courts of the Palais de Justice roll with unusual crowds, coming and going; their huge outer hum mingles with the clang of patriotic eloquence within, and gives vigor to it. Poor Loménie gazes from the distance, little comforted; has his invisible emissaries flying to and fro, insidious, without result.

153. So pass the sultry dog-days, in the most electric manner, and the whole month of July. And still, in the sanctuary of justice, sounds nothing but Harmodius-Aristogiton eloquence, environed with the hum of crowding Paris, and no registering accomplished, and no "states" furnished. "States?" said a lively parliamenteer; "messieurs, the states that should be furnished us, in my opinion, are the states-general."
On which timely joke there follow eulogistic buzzes of approval. What a word to be spoken in the Palais de Justice! Old D'Ormesson (the ex-controller's uncle) shakes his judicious head, far enough from laughing. But the outer courts, and Paris and France, catch the glad sound, and repeat it; shall repeat it, and re-echo and reverberate it, till it grow a deafening peal. Clearly enough—here is no registering to be thought of.

154. The pious proverb says, "There are remedies for all things but death." When a parliament refuses registering, the remedy, by long practice, has become familiar to the simplest—a bed of justice. One complete month this parliament has spent in mere idle jargoning, and sound and fury; the timbre edict not registered, or like to be; the subvention not yet so much as spoken of. On the 6th of August let the whole refractory body roll out, in wheeled vehicles, as far as the king's château of Versailles; there shall the king, holding his bed of justice, order them, by his own royal lips, to register. They may remonstrate in an undertone, but they must obey, lest a worse, unknown thing befall them.

155. It is done: the parlement has rolled out on royal summons; has heard the express royal order to register. Whereupon it has rolled back again, amid the hushed expectancy of men. And now, behold, on the morrow this parlement, seated once more in its own palais, with "crowds inundating the outer courts," not only does not register, but (O, portent!) declares all that was done on the prior day to be null, and the bed of justice as good as a futility. In the history of France here verily is a new feature.

156. To such length can the universal spirit of an nation penetrate the most isolated body-corporate: say rather with such weapons, homicidal and suicidal, in exasperated political duel, will bodies-corporate fight! But in any case, is not this the real death-grapple of war and internecine duel, Greek meeting Greek; wherein men, had they even no interest in it, might look with interest unspeakable? Crowds, as was said, inundate the outer courts: inundation of young eleutheromanias noblemen in English costume, uttering audacious speeches; of procurers, basoche-clerks, who are idle in these days; of loungers, news-mongers, and other nondescript classes, rolls tumultuous there. "From three to four thousand persons," waiting eagerly to hear the arrêtés (resolutions) you arrive at within; applauding with braves, with the clapping of from six to eight thousand hands. Sweet, also, is the need of patriotic eloquence, when your D'Espreménil, your Préteau, or Sabatier, issuing from his Demosthenic Olympus; the thunder being hushed for the day, is welcomed in the outer courts with a shout from 4,000 throats, is borne home shoulder-high "with benedictions,"and strikes the stars with his sublime head.

CHAPTER V.

LOMÉNIE'S THUNDERBOLTS.

157. Arise, Loménie-Brienne, here is no case for "letters of jussion;" for faltering or compromise. Thou seest the whole loose fluent population of Paris (whatever is not solid, and fixed to work) inundating these outer courts like a loud destructive deluge; the very basoche of lawyers, clerks talks sedition. The lower classes, in this duel of authority with authority, Greek throttling Greek, have ceased to respect the city-watch; police-satellites are marked on the back with chalk (the M signifies mouchard, spy); they are hustled, hunted like foes nature. Subordinate rural tribunals send messengers of congratulation, of adherence. Their fountain of justice is becoming a fountain of revolt. The provincial parliaments look on with intent eye, with breathless wishes, while their elder sister of Paris does battle; the whole twelve are of one blood and temper, the victory of one is that of all.

158. Ever worse it grows; on the 10th of August, there is "plainte" emitted touching the "prodigalities of Calonne," and permission to "proceed" against him. No registering, but instead of it, denouncing—of delapidation, peculation; and ever the burden of the song, States-general! Have the royal armories no thunderbolt, that thou couldst, O Loménie, with red right hand launch it among these Demosthenic, theatrical thunder-barrels—mere resin and noise for most part—and shatter and smite them silent? On the night of the 14th of August, Loménie launches—his thunderbolt, or handful of them. Letters named of the seal (de-cachet), as many as needful, some six-score and odd, are delivered over night. And so, next day betimes, the whole parlement, once more set on wheels, is rolling incessantly toward Troyes in Champagne, "escorted," says history, "with the blessings of all people," the very innkeepers and postillions looking gratuitously reverent.* This is the

159. What will not people bless, in their extreme need? Seldom had the parlement of Paris deserved much blessing, or received much. An isolated body-corporate, which, out of old confusions (while the scepter of the sword was confusedly struggling to become a scepter of the pen), had got itself together better and worse, as bodies-corporate do, to satisfy some dim desire of the world, and many clear desires of individuals; and so had grown in the course of centuries, on concession, on acquirement, and usurpation, to be what we see it, a prosperous social anomaly, deciding lawsuits, sanctioning or rejecting laws, and withal, disposing of its places and offices by sale for ready money—which method sleek President Hénault, after meditation, will demonstrate to be the indifferent-best.*

160. In such a body, existing by purchase for ready money, there could not be excess of public spirit; there might well be excess of eagerness to divide the public spoil. Men in helmets have divided that with swords; men in wigs with quill and ink-horn do divide it; and even more hatefully these latter, if more peaceably, for the wig-method is at once irresistible and baser. By long experience says Besenval, it has been found use less to sue a parlementeer at law; no officer of justice will serve a writ on one; his wig and gown are his Vulcan's-panoply, his enchanted cloak-of-darkness.
161. The parlement of Paris may count itself an unloved body; mean, not magnanimous on the political side. Were the king weak, always, (as now) has his parlement barked, cur-like, at his heels, with what popular cry there might be. Were he strong, it barked before his face, hunting for him as his alert beagle. An unjust body, where foul influences have more than once worked shameful perversion of judgment. Does not, in these very days, the blood of murdered Lally cry aloud for vengeance? Baited, circumvented, driven mad like the snared lion, valor had to sink extinguished under vindictive chicane. Behold him, that hapless Lally, his wild dark soul looking through his wild dark face; trailed on the ignominious death-hurdle, the voice of his despair choked by a wooden gag! The wild fire-soul that has known only peril and toil, and for three-score years has buffeted against fate’s obstruction and men’s perfidy, like genius and courage amid poltroonery, dishonesty, and commonplace, faithfully enduring and endeavoring—O parlement of Paris, dost thou reward it with a gibbet and a gag? * The dying Lally bequeathed his memory to his boy: a young Lally has arisen, demanding redress in the name of God and man. The parlement of Paris does its utmost to defend the indefensible, abominable; nay, what is singular, dusky-glowing Aristogiton d’Espréménil is the man chosen to be its spokesman in that.

162. Such social anomaly is it that France now blesses. An unclean social anomaly: but in duel against another worse, the exiled parlement is felt to have “covered itself with glory.” There are quarrels in which even Satan, bringing help, were not unwelcome; even Satan, fighting stiffly, might cover himself with glory—of a temporary sort.

163. But what a stir in the outer courts of the palais, when Paris finds its parlement trundled off to Troyes in Champagne; and nothing left but a few mute keepers of records; the Demosthenic thunder become extinct, the martyrs of liberty clean gone! Confused wail and menace rises from the four thousand throats of procureurs, basse-clerks, non-descripts, and Anglomaniac noblesse; ever new idlers crowd to see and hear; rascality, with increasing numbers and vigor, hunts mouchards. Loud whirlpool rolls through these spars; the rest of the city, fixed to its work, cannot yet go rolling. Audacious placards are legible; in and about the palais, the speeches are as good as seditions. Surely the temper of Paris is much changed. On the third day of this business (18th of August) Monsieur and Monseigneur d’Artois, coming in state carriages, according to use and wont, to have these late obnoxious arrétés and protests “expunged” from the records, are received in the most marked manner, Monsieur, who is thought to be in opposition, is met with vivats and strewed flowers; monseigneur, on the other hand, with silence, with murmurs, which rise to hisses and groans; nay an irreverent rascality presses toward him in floods, with such hissing vehemence that the captain of the guards has to give order, "Haut les armes (Handle arms)!" at which thunder-word, indeed, and the flash of the clear iron, the rascal-flood recoils, through all avenues, fast enough. New features these. Indeed, as good M. de Malesherbes pertinently remarks, "it is a quite new kind of contest this with the parlement;" no transitory splutter, as from collision of hard bodies more like "the first sparks of what, if not quenched, may become a great conflagration."

164. This good Malesherbes sees himself now again in the king's council, after an absence of ten years. Loménie would profit if not by the faculties of the man, yet by the name he has. As for the man's opinion, it is not listened to; wherefore he will soon withdraw, a second time, back to his books and his trees. In such king's council what can a good man profit? Turgot tries it not a second time. Turgot has quitted France and this earth some years ago; and now cares for none of these things. Singular enough, Turgot, this same Loménie, and the Abbé Morelet were once a trio of young friends, fellow-scholars in the Sorbonne. Forty new years have carried them severally thus far.

165. Meanwhile the parlement sits daily at Troyes, calling cases, and daily adjourns, no procureur making his appearance to plead. Troyes is as hospitable as could be looked for, nevertheless, one has comparatively a dull life. No crowds now to carry you, shoulder high, to the immortal gods; scarcely a patriot or two will drive out so far, and bid you be of firm courage. You are in furnished lodgings, far from home and domestic comfort, little to do but wander over the unlovely Champagne fields, seeing the grapes ripen, taking counsel about the thousand times consulted, a prey to tedium, in danger even that Paris may forget you. Messengers come and go; Pacific Loménie is not slack in negotiating, promising; D'Ormesson and the prudent elder members see no good in strife.

166. After a dull month, the parlement, yielding and retaining, makes truce, as all parlements must. The stamp-tax is withdrawn, the subvention land-tax is also withdrawn; but in its stead there is granted what is called a "prorogation of the second twentieth," itself a kind of land-tax, but not so oppressive to the influential classes; which lies mainly on the dumb class. Moreover, secret promises exist (on the part of the elders) that finances may be raised by loan. Of the ugly word states-general there shall be no mention.

167. And so, on the 20th of September, our exiled parlement returns. D'Esprémnil said, "It went out covered with glory, but had come back covered with mud (de bone)." Not so, Aristogiton, or if so, thou surely art the man to clean it.
CHAPTER VI.

LOMÉNIE'S PLOTS.

168. Was ever unfortunate chief minister so bested as Loménie-Brienne? The reins of the state fairly in his hand these six months, and not the smallest motive-power (of finance) to stir from the spot with, this way or that! He flourishes his whip, but advances not. Instead of ready money, there is nothing but rebellious debating and recalcitrating.

169. Far is the public mind from being calmed; it goes chafing and fuming ever worse; and in the royal coffers, with such yearly deficit running on, there is hardly the color of coin. Ominous prognostics! Malesherbes, seeing an exhausted, exasperated France grow hotter and hotter, talks of "conflagration;" Mirabeau, without talk, has, as we perceive, descended on Paris again, close on the rear of the parlement— not to quit his native soil any more.

170. Over the frontiers, behold Holland invaded by Prussia, the French party oppressed, England and the stadtholder triumphing, to the sorrow of War-Secretary Montmorin and all men. But without money, sinews of war, of work, and of existence itself, what can a chief minister do? Taxes profit little; this of the second twentieth falls not due till next year, and will then, with its "strict valuation," produce more controversy than cash. Taxes on the privileged classes cannot be got registered, are intolerable to our supporters themselves; taxes on the unprivileged yield nothing—as from a thing drained dry more cannot be drawn. Hope is nowhere if not in the old refuge of loans.

171. To Loménie, aided by the long head of La-noignon, deeply pondering this sea of troubles, the thought suggested itself, Why not have a successive loan (emprunt successif), or loan that went on lending, year after year, as much as needful, say till 1792? The trouble of registering such loan were the same; we had then breathing time, money to work with, at least to subsist on. Edict of a successive loan must be proposed. To conciliate the philosophies, let a liberal edict walk in front of it, for emancipation of Protestants; let a liberal promise guard the rear of it, that when our loan ends, in that final 1792, the states-general shall be convoked.

172. Such liberal edict of Protestant emancipation, the time having come for it, shall cost Loménie as little as the "death-penalties to be put in execution" did. As for the liberal promise of states-general, it can be fulfilled or not: the fulfillment is five good years off, in five years much intervenes. But the registering? Ah, truly, there is the difficulty! However, we have that promise of the elders, given secretly at Troyes. Judicious gratuities, cajoleries, underground intrigues, with old Foulon, named "Ame damnée—Familiar-demon—of the parlement," may, perhaps, do the rest. At worst and lowest, the royal authority has resources—which ought it not to put forth? If it cannot realize money, the royal authority is as good as dead—dead of that surest and miserablest death, inanition. Risk and win; without risk, all is already lost! For the rest—as in enterprises of pitch a torch of stratagem often proves furthersome—his majesty announces a royal hunt, for the 19th of November next, and all whom it concerns are joyfully getting their gear ready.

173. Royal hunt, indeed, but of two-legged unfeathered game! At eleven in the morning of that royal hunt day, 19th of November, 1787, unexpected blare of trumpeting, tumult of charioteering and cavalcading, disturbs the seat of justice: his majesty is come, with Garde-des-Sceaux Lamoignon, and peers and retinue, to hold royal session and have edicts registered. What a change since Louis XIV. entered here in boots; and, whip in hand, ordered his registering to be done—with an Olympian look, which none durst gainsay; and did, without stratagem, in such unceremonious fashion, hunt as well as register!* For Louis XVI., on this day, the registering will be enough, if, indeed, he and the day suffice for it.

174. Meanwhile, with fit ceremonial words, the purpose of the royal breast is signified—two edicts, for Protestant emancipation, for successive loan, of both which edicts our trusty Garde-des-Sceaux Lamoignon will explain the purport; on both which a trusty parlement is requested to deliver its opinion, each member having free privilege of speech. And so, Lamoignon, too, having perorated not amiss, and wound up with that promise of states-general—the sphere-music of parlementary eloquence begins. Explosive, responsive, sphere answering sphere, it waxes louder and louder. The peers sit attentive, of diverse sentiment, unfriendly to states-general, unfriendly to despotism, which cannot reward merit, and is suppressing places. But what agitates his highness D'Orléans? The rubicund moon-head goes wagging; darker beams the copper visage, like unscoured copper; in the glazed eye is disquietude; he rolls uneasy in his seat, as if he meant something. Amid unutterable satiety, has suddenly new appetite, for new forbidden fruit, been vouchsafed him? disgust and edacity, laziness that cannot rest; futile ambition, revenge, non-admiralship—O, within that carbuncled skin what a confusión of confusions sits bottled!

175. “Eight couriers,” in the course of the day, gallop from Versailles, where Loménie waits palpitating, and gallop back again, not with the best news. In the outer courts of the palais, huge buzz of expectation reigns; it is whispered the chief minister has lost six votes over night. And from within resounds nothing but forensic eloquence, pathetic and even indignant heartrending appeals to the royal clemency, that his majesty would please to summon states-general forthwith, and be the savior of France—wherein dusky-glowing D'Espréménil, but still more Sabatier de Cabre, and Fréteau, since named Commère Fréteau (Goody Fréteau), are among the loudest. For six mortal hours it lasts, in this manner, the infinite hubbub unslackened.

176. And so now, when brown dusk is falling through the windows, and no end visible, his majesty, on hint of Garde-des-Sceaux Lamoignon, opens his royal lips once more to say, in brief, that he must have his loan-edicts registered. Momentary deep pause! See! Monseigneur d'Orléans rises; with moon-visage turned toward the royal platform, he asks, with a delicate graciosity of manner covering unutterable things, "whether it is a bed of justice, then, or a royal session." Fire flashes on him from the throne and neighborhood; suriy answer that "it is a session." In that case, monseigneur will crave leave to remark that edicts cannot be registered by order in a session; and, indeed to enter against such registry, his individual humble protest.

"Vous êtes bien le maître (You will do your pleasure)," answers the king; and thereupon, in high state, marches out, escorted by his court retinue; D'Orléans himself, as in duty bound, escorting him, but only to the gate. Which duty done, D'Orléans returns in from the gate, redacts his protest, in the face of an applauding parlement, an applauding France; and so—has cut his court-moorings. shall we say? And will now sail and drift, fast enough, toward chaos?

177. Thou foolish D'Orléans; equality that art to be! Is royalty grown a mere wooden scarecrow, wherein thon, pert, scald-headed crow, mayest alight at pleasure and peck? Not yet wholly.

178. Next day a lettre-de-cachet sends D'Orléans to bethink himself in his château of Villers-Cotterets, where, alas, is no Paris, with its joyous necessaries of life; no fascinating, indispensable Madame de Buffon—light wife of a great naturalist much too old for her. Monseigneur, it is said, does nothing but walk distractedly at Villers-Cotterets, cursing his stars. Versailles itself shall hear penitent wail from him, so hard is his doom. By a second, simultaneous lettre-de-cachet, Goody Fréteau is hurled into the stronghold of Ham, amid the Norman marshes; by a third, Sabatier de Cabre into Mont St. Michel, amid the Norman quicksands. As for the parlement, it must, on summons, travel out to Versailles, with its register-book under its arm, to have the protest biffé (expunged); not without admonition, and even rebuke. A stroke of authority which, one might have hoped, would quiet matters.

179. Unhappily, no; it is a mere taste of the whip to rearing coursers, which makes them rear worse! When a team of twenty-five millions begins rearing, what is Loménie's whip? The parlement will nowise acquiesce meekly, and set to register the Protestant edict, and do its other work, in salutary fear of these three lettres-de-cachet. Far from that, it begins questioning lettres-de-cachet generally; their legality, endurability; emits dolorous objurgation, petition on petition to have its three martyrs delivered; cannot, till that be complied with, so much as think of examining the Protestant edict, but puts it off always “till this day weck.”

180. In which objurgatory strain Paris and France joins it, or rather has preceded it, making fearful choruses. And now, also, the other parlements, at length opening their mouths, begin to join; some of them, as at Grenoble and at Rennes, with portentous emphasis, threatening, by way of reprisal, to interdict the very tax-gatherer, as Malesherbes remarks, “it was the parlement that excited the public; but here it is the public that excites the parlement.”

CHAPTER VII.

INTERNECINE.

181. What a France, through these winter months of the year 1787! The very oeil-de-beuf is doleful, uncertain with a general feeling among the suppressed that it were better to be in Turkey. The wolfhounds are suppressed, the bear-hounds, Duke de Coigny, Duke de Polignac; in the Trianon little-heaven, her majesty, one evening, takes Besenval’s arm; asks his candid opinion. The intrepid Besenval, having, as he hopes, nothing of the sycophant in him, plainly signifies that, with a parlement in rebellion, and an oeil-de-beuf in suppression the king’s crown is in danger; whereupon, singular to say, her majesty, as if hurt, changed the subject, Et ne me parle plus de rien!*

182. To whom, indeed, can this poor queen speak? In need of wise counsel, if ever mortal was, yet beset here only by the hubbub of chaos! Her dwelling place is so bright to the eye, and confusion and black care darkens it all. Sorrows of the sovereign, sorrows of the woman, thick-coming sorrows environ her more and more. Lamotte, the necklace-countess, has in these late months escaped, perhaps been suffered to escape, from the Salpêtrière. Vain was the hope that Paris might thereby forget her, and this everwidening lie, and heap of lies, subside. The Lamotte, with a V. (for volume—chief) branded on both shoulders, has got to England, and will therefrom emit lie on lie, defiling the highest queenly name; mere distracted lies,† which, in its present humor, France will greedily believe.

183. For the rest, it is too clear our successive loan is not filling, as, indeed, in such circumstances, a loan registered by expunging of protests was not the likeliest to fill. Denunciation of lettres-de-cachet, of despotism generally, abates not; the twelve parlements are busy; the twelve hundred placarders, ballad-singers, pamphleteers. Paris is what, in figurative speech, they call “flooded with pamphlets (re-

gorge de brochures); "flooded and eddying again.
Hot deluge, from so many patriot ready-writers, all at the fervid or boiling point; each ready-writer, now in the hour of eruption, going like an Iceland geyser! Against which what can a judicious friend Morellet do, a Rivarol, an unruly Linguet (well paid for it), spouting coid?

184. Now also, at length, does come discussion of the Protestant edict; but only for new embroilment, in pamphlet and counter-pamphlet, increasing the madness of men. Not even orthodoxy, bed-rid as she seemed, but will have a hand in this confusion. She once again, in the shape of Abbé Lenfant, "whom prelates drive to visit and congratulate," raises audible sound from her pulpit-drum.* Or mark how D'Espréménil, who has his own confused way in all things, produces at the right moment in parliamentary harangue, a pocket crucifix, with the apostrophe, "Will ye crucify him afresh?" Him, O D'Espréménil, without scruple—considering what poor stuff, of ivory and filigree, he is made of!

185. To all which add only that poor Brienne has fallen sick, so hard was the tear and wear of his sinful youth; so violent, incessant, is this agitation of his foolish old age. Baited, bayed at through so many throats, his grace, growing consumptive, inflammatory (with humeur de darrire), lies reduced to milk diet; in exasperation, almost in desperation, with "repos," precisely the impossible recipe, prescribed as the indispensable.†

* Lacretelle, i. 333. Montglaud, etc.
† Besseval, iii. 317.

186. On the whole, what can a poor government do but once more recoil ineffectual? The king's treasury is running toward the lees, and Paris "eddies with a flood of pamphlets." At all rates, let the latter subside a little! D'Orléans gets back to Raincy, which is nearer Paris and the fair frail Buffon; finally to Paris itself; neither are Prétet and Sabatier famished forever. The Protestant edict is registered, to the joy of Boissy d'Anglas and good Malesherbes; successive loan, all protests expunged or else withdrawn, remains open—the rather as few or none come to fill it. States-general, for which the parlement has clamored, and now the whole nation clamors, will follow "in five years," if, indeed, not sooner. O parlement of Paris, what a clamor was that! "Messieurs," said old D'Ormeason, "you will get states-general, and you will repent it." Like the horse in the fable, who, to be avenged of his enemy, applied to the man. The man mounted, did swift execution on the enemy, but, unhappily, would not dismount! Instead of five years, let three years pass, and this clamorous parlement shall have both seen its enemy hurled prostrate, and been itself ridden to surrender (say, rather, jugulated for hide and shoes), and lie dead in the ditch.

187. Under such omens, however, we have reached the spring of 1788. By no path can the king's government find passage for itself, but is everywhere shamefully flung back. Beleaguered by twelve rebellious parlements, which are grown to be the organs of an angry nation, it can advance nowhither; can accomplish nothing, obtain nothing, not so much as money to subsist on; but must sit there, seemingly, to be eaten up of déficit. 188. The measure of the iniquity, then, of the falsehood which has been gathering through long centuries, is nearly full. At least that of the misery is! From the hovels of the twenty-five millions the misery, permeating upward and forward, as its law is, has got so far—to the very Côté-de-Béuf of Versailles. Man's hand, in this blind pain, is set against man; not only the low against the higher, but the higher against each other; provincial noblesse is bitter against court noblesse, robe against sword, rochet against pen. But against the king's government, who is not bitter? Not even Besenval in these days. To it, all men and bodies of men are become enemies; it is the center whereon infinite contentions unite and clash. What new universal vertiginous movement is this of institutions, social arrangements, individual minds, which once worked co-operative, now rolling and grinding in distracted collision? Inevitable; it is the breaking up of a world-solecism, worn out at last, down even to bankruptcy of money! And so this poor Versailles court, as the chief or central solecism, finds all the other solecisms arrayed against it. Most natural! For your human solecisms, be it person or combination of persons, is ever, by law of nature, uneasy; if verging toward bankruptcy, it is even miserable; and when would the meanest solecism consent to blame or amend itself while there remained another to amend?

189. These threatening signs do not terrify Loménie, much less teach him. Loménie, though of light nature, is not without courage, of a sort. Nay, have we not read of lightest creatures, trained canary-birds, that could fly cheerfully with lighted matches, and fire cannon—fire whole powder magazines? To sit and die of déficit is no part of Loménie's plan. The evil is considerable; but can he not remove it? can he not attack it? At lowest, he can attack the symptom of it; these rebellions parlements he can attack, and, perhaps, remove. Much is dim to Loménie, but two things are clear—that such parliamentary duel with royalty is growing perilous, nay, internecine; above all, that money must be had. Take thought, brave Loménie, thou Garde-des-Sceaux Lamoignon, who hast ideas! So often defeated, balked cruelly, when the golden fruit seemed within clutches, rally for one other struggle. To tame the parlement, to fill the king's coffers—these are now life-and-death questions.

190. Parlements have been tamed more than once. Set to perch "on the peaks of rocks inaccessible except by litters," a parlement grows reasonable. O Maupeou, thou bold, bad man, had we left thy work where it was! But apart from exile, or other violent methods, is there not one method whereby all things are tamed, even lions? The method of hunger! What if the parlement's supplies were cut off, namely, its lawsuits!

191. Minor courts, for the trying of innumerable minor causes, might be instituted; these we could call grand bailliages. Whereon the parlement, shortened of its prey, would look with yellow despair; but the public, fond of cheap justice, with favor and hope. Then for finance, for registering of edicts, why not from our own Œil-de-Bœuf dignitaries, our princes, dukes, marshals, make a thing we could call plenary court; and there, so to speak, do our registering ourselves. St. Louis had his plenary court, of great barons,* most useful to him, our great barons are still here (at least the name of them is still here), our necessity is greater than his.

192. Such is the Loménie-Lamoignon device, welcome to the king’s council as a light-beam in great darkness. The device seems feasible; it is eminently needful; be it once well executed, great deliverance is wrought. Silent, then, and steady; now or never—the world shall see one other historical scene, and so singular a man as Loménie de Brienne still the stage-manager there.

193. Behold, accordingly, a Home-Secretary Bréteuil “beautifying Paris,” in the peaceablest manner, in this hopeful spring weather of 1788: the old hovels and hutchedisappearing from our bridges, as if for the state, too, there were halcyon weather, and nothing to do but beautify. Parlement seems to sit acknowledged victor. Brienne says nothing of finance, or even says and prints that it is all well. How is this, such halcyon quiet, though the successive loan did not fill? In a victorious parlement, Counselor Goeslard de Monsabert even denounces that “levying of the second twentieth on strict valuation;" and gets decreed that the valuation shall not be strict—not on the privileged classes. Nevertheless, Brienne endures it, launches no lettre-de-cachet against it. How is this?

194. Smiling is such vernal weather, but treacherous, sudden! For one thing, we hear it whispered, “the intendants of provinces have all got order to be at their posts on a certain day.” Still more singular, what incessant printing is this that goes on at the king’s château under lock and key? Sentries occupy all gates and windows; the printers come not out; they sleep in their work rooms; their very food is handed in to them!* A victorious parlement smells new danger. D’Espréménil has ordered horses to Versailles, prowls round that guarded printing-office; prying, sniffing, if so be the sagacity and ingenuity of man may penetrate it.

195. To a shower of gold most things are penetrable. D’Espréménil descends on the lap of a printer’s Danae, in the shape of “five hundred louis d’or;” the Danae’s husband smugges a ball of clay to her, which she delivers to the golden counselor of parlement. Kneaded within it there stick printed proofsheets—by heaven! the royal edict of that same self-registering plenary court, of those grand bailliages that shall cut short our lawsuits! It is to be proclaimed over all France on one and the same day.

196. This, then, is what the intendants were bid wait for at their posts; this is what the court sat

* Weber, i. 276.
hatching, as its accursed cockatrice-egg, and would not stir, though provoked, till the brood were out! His with it, D'Esprémenil, home to Paris; convocate instantaneous sessions; let the parlement, and the earth, and the heavens know it.

CHAPTER VIII.

LOMÉNIE'S DEATH-THROES.

197. On the morrow, which is the 3d of May, 1788, an astonislied parlement sits convoked, listens speechless to the speech of D'Esprémenil, unfolding the infinite misdeed. Deed of treachery, of unhallowed darkness, such as despotism loves! Denounce it, O parlement of Paris; awaken France and the universe; roll what thunder-barrels of forensic eloquence thou hast; with thee, too, it is verily now or never!

198. The parlement is not wanting at such juncture. In the hour of his extreme jeopardy, the lion first incites himself by roaring, by lashing his sides. So here the parlement of Paris. On the motion of D'Esprémenil, a most patriotic oath, of the one-and-all sort, is sworn, with united throat—an excellent new idea, which, in these coming years, shall not remain unimitated. Next comes indomitable declaration, almost of the rights of man, at least of the rights of parlement; invocation to the friends of French freedom, in this and in subsequent time. All which, or the essence of all which, is brought to paper; in a tone wherein something of plaintiveness blends with and tempers heroic valor. And thus, having sounded the storm-bell, which Paris hears, which all France will hear; and hurled such defiance in the teeth of Loménie and despotism, the parlement retires as from a tolerable first day's work.

199. But how Loménie felt to see his cockatrice-egg (so essential to the salvation of France) broken in this premature manner, let readers fancy! Indignant, he clutches at his thunderbolts (de-cachet, of the seal), and launches two of them—a bolt for D'Esprémenil; a bolt for that busy Goeslard, whose service in the second twentieth and "strict valuation" is not forgotten. Such bolts clutched promptly overnight, and launched with the early new morning, shall strike agitated Paris, if not into requiescence, yet into wholesome astonishment.

200. Ministerial thunderbolts may be launched; but if they do not hit? D'Esprémenil and Goeslard, warned both of them, as is thought, by the singing of some friendly bird, elude the Loménie tipstaves; escape disguised through sky Windows, over roofs, to their own Palais de Justice; the thunderbolts have missed. Paris (for the buzz flies abroad) is struck into astonishment not wholesome. The two martyrs of liberty doff their disguises, don their long gowns: behold, in the space of an hour, by aid of ushers and swift runners, the parlement, with its counselors, presidents, even peers, sits anew assembled. The assembled parlement declares that these its two martyrs cannot be given up to any sublimary authority;
moreover, that the "session is permanent," admitting of no adjournment till pursuit of them has been relinquished.

201. And so, with forensic eloquence, denunciation and protest, with couriers going and returning, the parlement, in this state of continual explosion that shall cease neither night nor day, waits the issue. Awakened Paris once more inundates those outer courts; boils, in floods wilder than ever, through all avenues. Dissonant hubbub there is; jargon as of Babel in the hour when they were first smitten (as here) with mutual unintelligibility, and the people had not yet dispersed!

202. Paris city goes through its diurnal epochs of working and slumbering; and now, for the second time, most European and African mortals are asleep. But here in this whirlpool of words, sleep falls not; the night spreads her coverlid of darkness over it vain. Within is the sound of mere martyr invincibility; tempered with the due tone of plaintiveness. Without is the infinite expectant hum—growing drowsier a little. So has it lasted for six and thirty hours.

203. But hark, through the dead of midnight, what tramp is this? Tramp as of armed men, foot and horse; gardes Françaises, gardes Suisses; marching hither, in silent regularity, in the glare of torchlight! There are sappers, too, with axes and crowbars: apparently, if the doors open not, they will be forced! It is Captain d'Agoust, missioned from Versailles. D'Agoust, a man of known firmness, who once forced Prince Condé himself, by mere incessant looking at him, to give satisfaction and fight; he now, with axes and torches, is advancing on the very sanctuary of justice. Sacrilegious, yet what help? The man is a soldier; looks merely at his orders; impassive, moves forward like an inanimate engine.

204. The doors open on summons, there need no axes—door after door. And now the innermost door opens, discloses the long-gowned senators of France, a hundred and sixty-seven by tale, seventeen of them peers, sitting there, majestic, "in permanent session." Were not the man military, and of cast-iron, this sight, this silence re-echoing the clank of his own boots, might stagger him! For the hundred and sixty-seven receive him in perfect silence, which some liken to that of the Roman senate overfallen by Brennus; some to that of a nest of coiners surprised by officers of the police. Messieurs, said D'Agoust, de par le roi! Express order has charged D'Agoust with the sad duty of arresting two individuals, M. Duval d'Espréménil and M. Goeslard de Monsabert. Which respectable individuals, as he has not the honor of knowing them, are hereby invited, in the king's name, to surrender themselves. Profound silence! buzz, which grows a murmur: "We are all D'Espréménils!" ventures a voice, which other voices repeat. The president inquires whether he will employ violence? Captain d'Agoust, honored with his majesty's commission, has to execute his majesty's order; would so gladly do it without violence, will in any case do it; grants an august senate space to deliberate which method they prefer. And thereupon D'Agoust, with grave military courtesy, has withdrawn for the moment.

* Weber, i. 383.

203. What boots it, august senators? All avenues are closed with fixed bayonets. Your courier gallops to Versailles, through the dewy night; but also gallops back again, with tidings that the order is authentic, that it is irrevocable. The outer courts simmer with idle population; but D'Agoust's grenadier-ranks stand there as immovable flood-gates; there will be no revolting to deliver you. "Messieurs!" thus spoke D'Espréménil, "when the victorious Gauls entered Rome, which they had carried by assault, the Roman senators, clothed in their purple, sat there, in their curule chairs, with a proud and tranquil countenance, awaiting slavery or death. Such, too, is the lofty spectacle which you, in this hour, offer to the universe (à l'univers), after having generously"—with much more of the like, as can still be read.

204. In vain, O D'Espréménil! Here is this cast-iron Captain d'Agoust, with his cast-iron military air, come back. Despotism, constraint, destruction, sit waving in his plumes. D'Espréménil must fall silent; heroically give himself up, lest worst befall. Him Goeslard heroically imitates. With spoken and speechless emotion, they fling themselves into the arms of their parlementary brethren, for a last embrace; and so, amid plaudits andplaints, from a hundred and sixty-five throats, amid waving, sob-bings, a whole forest-sigh of parliamentary pathos,—they are led through winding passages to the rear-gate, where, in the gray of the morning, two coaches with eempts stand waiting. There must the victims mount, bayonets menacing behind. D'Espréménil's stern question to the populace, "Whether they have courage?" is answered by silence. They mount and roll, and neither the rising of the May sun (it is the 6th morning) nor its setting shall lighten their heart; but they face forward continually; D'Espréménil toward the utmost Isles of Sainte Marguerite, or Hères (supposed by some, if that is any comfort, to be Calypso's island); Goeslard toward the land-fortress of Pierre-en-Cize, extant then near the city of Lyons.

207. Captain D'Agoust may now, therefore, look forward to majorship, to commandantship of the Tuileries—and, withal, vanish from history, where, nevertheless, he has been fated to do a notable thing. For not only are D'Espréménil and Goeslard safe whisking southward, but the parlement itself has straightway to march out—to that also his inexorable order reaches. Gathering up their long skirts, they file out, the whole hundred and sixty-five of them, through two rows of unsympathetic grenadiers, a spectacle to gods and men. The people revolt not, they only wonder and grumble; also, we remark, these unsympathetic grenadiers are grades Françaises.
—who, one day, will sympathize! In a word, the Palais de Justice is swept clear, the doors of it are locked; and D'Agouste returns to Versailles with the key in his pocket, having, as was said, merited preferment.

208. As for this parlement of Paris, now turned out to the street, we will without reluctance leave it there. The beds of justice it had to undergo, in the coming fortnight at Versailles, in registering, or rather refusing to register, those new-hatched edicts; and how it assembled in taverns and tap-rooms there, for the purpose of protesting; or hovered disconsolate, with outspread skirts, not knowing where to assemble; and was reduced to lodge protest with a notary; and in the end, to sit still (in a state of forced "vacation") and do nothing; all this, natural now as the burying of the dead after battle, shall not concern us. The parlement of Paris has as good as performed its part; doing and misdoing, so far, but hardly further, could it stir the world.

209. Loménie has removed the evil, then? Not at all, not so much as the symptom of the evil; scarcely the twelfth part of the symptom, and exasperated the other eleven! The intendant of provinces, the military commandants, are at their posts on the appointed 8th of May, but in no parlement, if not in the single one of Douai, can these new edicts get registered. Not peaceful signing with ink, but browbeating, bloodshedding, appeal to primary club-law! Against these bailiffages, against this plenary court, exasperated Themis everywhere shows face of battle; the provincial noblesse are of her party, and whoever hates Loménie and the evil time, will her attorneys and tipstaves, she enlists and operates down even to the populace. At Rennes in Brittany, where the historical Bertrand de Moleville is intendant, it has passed from fatal continual duelling, between the military and gentry, to street fighting, to stone-volleys and musket-shot; and still the edicts remain unregistered. The afflicted Bretons send remonstrance to Loménie, by a delegation of twelve, whom, however, Loménie having heard them, shuts up in the Bastille. A second, larger, delegation he meets, by his scouts, on the road, and persuades or frightens back. But now a third, largest, delegation is indignantly sent by many roads; refused audience on arriving, it meets to take council; invites Lafayette and all patriot Bretons in Paris to assist, agitates itself—becomes the Breton Club, first germ of the Jacobin's society.*

210. So many as eight parlements get exiled; others might need that remedy, but it is one not always easy of appliance. At Grenoble, for instance, where a Mounier, a Barnave, have not been idle, the parlement had due order (by letters-de-cachet) to depart, and exile itself, but on the morrow, instead of coaches getting yoked, the alarm-bell bursts forth, crowds of peals and booms all day—crows of mountaineers rush down, with axes, even with firelocks—whom (most ominous of all!) the soldiery shows no eagerness to deal with. "Axe over head," the poor general has to sign capitulation, to engage that the lettres-de-cachet shall remain unexecuted, and a beloved parlement stay where it is. Besançon, Dijon, Rouen, Bourdeaux, are not what they should be! At Pau in Bearn, where the old commandant had failed, a new one (a Grammont, native to them) is met by a procession of towns-men with the eradle of Henri Quatre, the palladium of their town; is conjured as he venerates this old tortoise-shell, in which the great Henri was rocked, not to trample on Bearnese liberty; is informed, withal, that his majesty's cannon are all safe, in the keeping of his majesty's faithful burghers of Pau, and do now lie pointed on the walls there, ready for action.*

211. At this rate, your grand baillages are like to have a stormy infancy. As for the plenary court, it has literally expired in the birth. The very courtiers looked shy at it; old Marshal Broglie declined the honor of sitting therein. Assaulted by a universal storm of mingled ridicule and execration, this poor plenary court met once, and never any second time.

Distraeted country! Contention hisses up, with forked hydra-tongue, wheresoever poor Loménie sets his foot. "Let a commandant, a commissioner of the king," says Weber, "enter one of these parlements to have an edict registered, the whole tribunal will disappear, and leave the commandant alone with the clerk and first president. The edict registered and the commandant gone, the whole tribunal hastens back, to declare such registration null. The highways are covered with grand deputations of parlements, proceeding to Versailles, to have their registers expunged by the king's hand; or returning home, to cover a new page with a new resolution still more audacious."

212. Such is the France of this year 1788. Not now a golden or paper age of hope, with its horseracings, balloon-flyings, and finer sensibilities of the heart. Ah! gone is that; its golden effulgence paled, bedarkened in this singular manner, brewing toward preternatural weather! For, as in that wreck-storm, of Paul et Virginie and Saint Pierre, "One huge motionless cloud" (say, of sorrow and indignation) "girdles our whole horizon, streams up, hairy, copper-edged, over a sky of the color of lead." Motionless itself, but "small clouds," as exiled parlements and such-like, "parting from it, fly over the zenith with the velocity of birds," till, at last, with one loud howl, the whole four winds be dashed together, and all the world exclaim, There is the tornado! Tout le monde s'écria, voilà l'ouragan!

* Weber, i. 276.
213. For the rest, in such circumstances, the successive loan, very naturally, remains unfilled; neither, indeed, can that impost of the second twentieth, at least not on "strict valuation," be levied to good purpose. "Lenders," says Weber, in his hysterical, vehement manner, "are afraid of ruin; tax-gatherers of hanging." The very clergy turn away their face; convoked in extraordinary assembly, they afford no gratuitous gift (don gratuit), if it be not that of advice. Here, too, instead of cash, is clamor for states-general.*

214. O Loménie-Brienne, with thy poor flimsy mind all bewildered, and now "three actual cauteries" on thy worn-out body, who art like to die of inflammation, provocation, milk-diet, dartres vives, and maladie (best untranslated);† and president over, a France with innumerable actual cauteries, which, also is dying of inflammation and the rest! Was it wise to quit the bosky verdure of Brienne, and thy new ashlar château there, and what is held for this? Soft were those shades and lawns; sweet the hymns of poetasters, the banishments of high-rouged graces,‡ and always this and the other philosopher Morellet (nothing deeming himself or thee a questionable sham priest) could be so happy in making happy; and, also (hadst thou known it), in the military school hard by, there sat, studying mathematics, a dusky-complexioned, taciturn boy, under the name

215. On the 13th of July of this 1788, there fell, on the very edge of harvest, the most frightful hailstorm, scattering into wild waste the fruits of the year, which had otherwise suffered grievously by drought. For sixty leagues round Paris, especially, the ruin was almost total. To so many other evils, then, there is to be added that of dearth, perhaps of famine.

216. Some days before this hailstorm, on the 5th of July, and still more decisively some days after it, on the 8th of August, Loménie announces that the states-general are actually to meet in the following month of May. Till after which period, this of the plenary court, and the rest, shall remain postponed. Further, as in Loménie there is no plan of forming or holding these most desirable states-general, "thinkers are invited" to furnish him with one, through the medium of discussion by the public press!

217. What could a poor minister do? There are still ten months of respite reserved. A sinking pilot will fling out all things, his very biscuit-bags, lead, log, compass, and quadrant, before flinging out himself. It is on this principle of sinking, and the incipient delirium of despair, that we explain, likewise, the almost miraculous "invitation to thinkers." Invitation to chaos to be so kind as build, out of its tumultuous drift-wood, an ark of escape for him? In these cases, not invitation, but command, has usually proved serviceable. The queen stood that evening, pensive, in a window, with her face turned toward the garden. The chef de gobelet had followed her with an obsequious cup of coffee, and then retired till it were sipped. Her majesty beckoned Dame Campan to approach. "Grand Dieu!" murmured she, with the cup in her hand, "what a piece of news will be made public to-day! The King grants states-general." Then raising her eyes to heaven (if Campan were not mistaken), she added, "'Tis a first beat of the drum of ill-omen for France. This noblesse will ruin us."*218. During all that hatching of the plenary court, while Lamoignon looked so mysterious, Besenval had kept asking him one question: Whether they had cash? To which, as Lamoignon always answered (on the faith of Loménie), that the cash was safe, judicious Besenval rejoined then that all was safe. Nevertheless, the melancholy fact is, that the royal coffers are almost getting literally void of coin. Indeed, apart from all other things, this "invitation to thinkers," and the great change now at hand, are enough to "arrest the circulation of capital," and forward only that of pamphlets. A few thousand gold louis are now all of money or money's worth that remains in the king's treasury. With another movement, as of desperation, Loménie invites Necker to come and be controller of finances! Necker has other work in view than controlling finances for Loménie; with a dry refusal, he stands taciturn, awaiting his time.

219. What shall a desperate prime minister do? He has grasped at the strong-box of the King's Theater. Some lottery had been set on foot for those sufferers by the hailstorm; in his extreme necessity, Loménie lays hands even on this.* To make provision for the passing day, any terms will soon be impossible. On the 16th of August, poor Weber heard at Paris and Versailles, hawkers, "with a hoarse, stifled tone of voice (voix étouffée, sourde)," drawing and snuffling through the streets an edict concerning payments (such was the soft title Rivarol had contrived for it). All payments at the royal treasury shall be made henceforth three-fifths in cash, and the remaining two-fifths—in paper bearing interest! Poor Weber almost swooned at the sound of these cracked voices, with their doleful raven-note, and will never forget the effect it had on him.†

220. But the effect on Paris, on the world generally? From the dens of stock brokerage, from the heights of political economy, of Neckerism and philosophism, from all articulate and inarticulate throats, rise hootings and howlings, such as ear had not yet heard. Sedition itself was imminent! Monseigneur d'Artois, moved by Duchess Polignac, feels called to wait upon her majesty, and explain frankly what crisis matters stand in. "The queen wept," Brienne himself wept, for it is now visible and palpable that he must go.

221. Remains only that the court, to whom his manners and garrulities were always agreeable, shall make his fall soft. The grasping old man has already got his archbishopship of Toulouse exchanged for the richer one of Sens; and now, in this hour of pity, he shall have the co-adjutorship for his nephew (hardly yet of due age); a dameship of the palace for his niece, a regiment for her husband, for himself a red cardinal's hat, a coupe de bois (cutting from the royal forests), and, on the whole, "from five to six hundred thousand livres of revenue." Finally, his brother, the Comte de Brienne, shall still continue war-minister. Buckled round with such bolsters and huge feather-beds of promotion, let him now fall as soft as he can!

222. And so Loménie departs; rich, if court-tiles and money-bonds can enrich him, but, if these cannot, perhaps the poorest of all extant men. "Hissed at by the people of Versailles," he drives forth to Jardy, southward to Brienne, for recovery of health. Then to Nice, to Italy, but shall return; shall glide to and fro, tremulous, faint-twinkling, fallen on awful times, till the guillotine snuff out his weak existence? Alas! worse: for it is blown out, or choked out, foully, pitifully, on the way to the guillotine! In his palace of Sens, rude Jacobin bailiffs made him drink with them from his own wine-cellar.

lars, feast with them from his own larder, and on the morrow morning the miserable old man lies dead. This is the end of Prime Minister Cardinal Archbishop Loménie de Brienne. Flimsier mortal was never fated to do as weighty a mischief, to have a life as despicable-envied, an exit as frightful. Fired as the phrase is, with ambition; blown, like a kindled rag, the sport of winds, not this way, not that way, but of all ways, straight toward such a powder-mine—which he kindled! Let us pity the hapless Loménie, and forgive him; and as soon as possible, forget him.

CHAPTER IX.

BURIAL WITH BONFIRE.

223. Besenval, during these extraordinary operations of payment two-fifths in paper, and change of prime minister, had been out on a tour through his district of command, and, indeed, for the last months peacefully drinking the waters of Contrexéville. Returning now in the end of August toward Moulins, and "knowing nothing," he arrives one evening at Langres, finds the whole town in a state of uproar (grande rumeur). Doubtless some sedition, a thing too common in these days. He alights, nevertheless, inquires of a "man tolerably dressed," what the matter is. "How," answers the man; "you have not heard the news? The archbishop is thrown out, and
M. Necker is recalled; and all is going to go well.*

224. Such rumour and vociferous acclaim has arisen round M. Necker, ever from "that day when he issued from the queen's apartments," a nominated minister. It was on the 24th of August, "the galleries of the château, the courts, the streets of Versailles, in few hours the capital, and as the news flew, all France, resounded with the cry of Vive le Roi! Vive M. Necker!"† In Paris, indeed, it unfortunately got the length of "turbulence." Petards, rockets go off in the Place Dauphine, more than enough. A "wicker figure (mannequin d'osier)," in archbishop's stole made emblematically, three-fifths of it satin, two-fifths of it paper, is promenaded, not in silence, to the popular judgment-bar; is doomed, shriven by a mock Abbé de Vermond, then solemnly consumed by fire at the foot of Henri's statue on the Pont Neuf—with such petarding and huzzaing that Chevalier Dubois and his city-watch see good finally to make a charge (more or less ineffectual); and there wanted not burning of sentry-boxes, forcing of guard-houses, and also "dead bodies thrown into the Seine overnight," to avoid new effervescence.‡

225. Parlements, therefore, shall return from exile; plenary court, payment two-fifths in paper, have vanished, gone off in smoke, at the foot of Henri's statue. States-general (with a political millennium) are now certain, nay, it shall be announced, in our fond haste, for January next; and all, as the Langres man said, is "going to go."

226. To the prophetic glance of Besenval, one other thing is too apparent, that friend Lamoignon cannot keep his keepership. Neither he nor war-minister Comte de Brienne! Already old Foulon, with an eye to be war-minister himself, is making underground movements. This is that same Foulon named Aimé damné du parlement, a man grown gray in treachery, in griping, projecting, intriguing, and iniquity; who, once when it was objected to some finance scheme of his, "What will the people do?" made answer in the fire of discussion, "The people may eat grass;" hasty words, which fly abroad irrevocable, and will send back tidings.

227. Foulon, to the relief of the world, fails on this occasion; and will always fall. Nevertheless, it steads not M. de Lamoignon. It steads not the doomed man that he have interviews with the king, and be "seen to return radieux," emitting rays. Lamoignon is the hated of parlements; Comte de Brienne is brother to the cardinal archbishop. The 24th of August has been, and the 14th September is not yet, when they two, as their great principal had done, descend—made to fall soft, like him.

228. And now, as if the last burden had been rolled from its heart, and assurance were at length perfect, Paris bursts forth anew into extreme jubilee. The basoche rejoices aloud that the foe of parlements is fallen; nobility, gentry, commonalty have rejoiced, and rejoice. Nay, now, with emphasis, rascality itself, starting suddenly from its dim depths, will arise and do it; for down even thither the new political evangel, in some rude version or other, has penetrated. It is Monday, the 14th of September, 1788: rascality assembles anew in great force, in the Place Dauphine; lets off petards, fires blunderbusses, to an incredible extent, without interval, for eighteen hours. There is again a wicker figure, "mannequin of osier," the center of endless howlings. Also Necker's portrait snatched or purchased from a print-shop, is borne processionally, aloft on a perch, with huzzas—an example to be remembered.

229. But chiefly on the Pont Neuf, where the great Henri, in bronze, rides sublime, there do the crowds gather. All passengers must stop till they have bowed to the people's king, and said audibly, Vive Henri Quatre; au diable Lamoignon! No carriage but must stop, not even that of his highness d'Orléans. Your coach-doors are opened; monsieur will please to put forth his head and bow, or even if refractory, to alight altogether and kneel; from madame a wave of her plumes, a smile of her fair face where she sits shall suffice; and surely a coin or two (to buy fusées) were not unreasonable from the upper classes, friends of liberty? In this manner it proceeds for days, in such rude horse-play—not without kicks. The city-watch can do nothing—hardly save its own skin. For the last twelvemonths, as we have sometimes seen, it has been a kind of pastime to hunt the watch.

BESENVAL, indeed, is at hand with soldiers; but they have orders to avoid firing, and are not prompt to stir.

230. On Monday morning, the explosion of petards began, and now it is near midnight of Wednesday; and the "wicker mannequin" is to be buried—apparently in the antique fashion. Long rows of torches following it, move toward the Hotel Lamoignon; but "a servant of mine" (Besseval's) has run to give warning, and there are soldiers come. Gloomy Lamoignon is not to die by conflagration; or this night—not yet for a year, and then by gunshot (suicidal or accidental is unknown).* Foiled rascality burns its "manikin of osier," under his windows, "tears up the sentry-box," and rolls off to try Brienne; to try Dubois, captain of the watch. Now, however, all is bestraining itself, gardes Françaises, invalides, horse-patrol: the torch procession is met with sharp shot, with the thrusting of bayonets, the slashing of sabers. Even Dubois makes a charge with that cavalry of his, and the cruellest charge of all: "there are a great many killed and wounded." Not without clangor, complaint, subsequent criminal trials, and official persons dying of heart-break.† So, however, with steel-besom, rascality is brushed back into its dim depths, and streets are swept clear.

231. Not for a century and a half had rascality ventured to step forth in this fashion; not for so long showed its huge rude lineaments in the light of day, A wonder and new thing, as yet gamboling merely,

in awkward Brobdingnag sport, not without quaintness, hardly in anger: yet in its huge, half-vacant laugh lurks a shade of grimness—which could unfold itself.

232. However, the thinkers invited by Loménie are now far on with their pamphlets; states-general on one plan or another, will infallibly meet; if not in January, as was once hoped, yet at latest in May. Old Duke de Richelieu, moribund in these autumn days, opens his eyes once more, murmuring, “What would Louis Fourteenth”(whom he remembers)”have said?”—then closes them again, forever, before the evil time.

233. The universal prayer, therefore, is to be fulfilled! Always in days of national perplexity, when wrong abounded and help was not, this remedy of states-general was called for, by a Malesherbes, nay, by a Fénelon,* even parlements calling for it were “escorted with blessings.” And now, behold, it is vouchsafed us; states-general shall verily be!

234. To say, let states-general be, was easy, to say in what manner they shall be, is not so easy. Since the year 1614, there have been no states-general met in France, all trace of them has vanished from the living habits of men. Their structure, powers, methods of procedure, which were never in any measure fixed, have now become wholly a vague possibility. Clay which the potter may shape, this way or that—say, rather, the twenty-five millions of potters; for so many have now, more or less, a vote in it! How to shape the states-general? There is a problem. Each body-corporate, each privileged, each organized class, has secret hopes of its own in that matter; and also secret misgivings of its own—for, behold, this monstrous twenty-million class, hitherto the dumb sheep which these others had to agree about the manner of shearing, is now also arising with hopes! It has ceased or is ceasing to be dumb; it speaks through pamphlets, or at least brays and growls behind them, in unison—increasing wonderfully their volume of sound.

235. As for the parlement of Paris, it has at once declared for the “old form of 1614.” Which form had this advantage, that the thirds estate, or commons, figured there as a show mainly; whereby the noblesse and clergy had but to avoid quarrel between themselves, and decide unobstructed what they thought best. Such was the clearly declared opinion of the Paris parlement. But, being met by a storm of mere hooting and howling from all men, such opinion was blown straightway to the winds, and the popularity of the parlement along with it—never to return. The parlement’s part, we said above, was as good as played. Concerning which, however, there is this further to be noted, the proximity of dates. It was on the 22d of September that the parlement returned from “vacation” or “exile in its estates,” to be reinstalled amid boundless jubilee from all Paris. Precisely next day it was that the same parlement came to its “clearly declared opinion;” and then, on the morrow after that, you behold it “covered with outrages;” its outer court one vast sibilation, and the glory departed from it for evermore. A popularity of twenty-four hours was, in those times, no uncommon allowance.

236. On the other hand, how superfluous was that invitation of Loménie’s, the invitation to thinkers! Thinkers and unthinkers, by the million, are spontaneously at their post, doing what is in them. Clubs labor: Société Publique, Breton Club, Enragés Club (Club des Enragés). Likewise dinner-parties in the Palais Royal; your Mirabeaus, Talleyrands dining there, in company with Chamforts, Morellets, with Duponts and hot parlementeers, not without object! For a certain Neckerean lion’s provider, whom one could name, assembles them there—or even their own private determination to have dinner does it. And then as to pamphlets—in figurative language, “It is a sheer snowing of pamphlets; like to snow-up the government thoroughfares!” Now is the time for friends of freedom: sane, and even insane.

237. Count, or self-styled Count, d’Aintrigues, “the young Languedocian gentleman,” with perhaps, Chamfort the cynic to help him, rises into furor almost Pythie; highest where many are high. Foolish young Languedocian gentleman, who himself so soon, “emigrating among the foremost,” has to fly indignant over the marches, with the "contrat social" in his pocket, toward outer darkness, thankless intriguings, ignis-fatuis hoverings, and death by the stiletto! Abbé Sieyes has left Chartres Cathedral, and canony and book-shelves there; has let his tonsure grow, and come to Paris with a secular head, of the most irrefragable sort, to ask three questions, and answer them: What is the third estate? All. What has it hitherto been in our form of government? Nothing. What does it want? To become something.

1 "Weber, I. 347.
2 Ibid. I. 360

238. D'Orléans—for be sure he, on his way to chaos, is in the thick of this—promulgates his "Délibérations,"* fathered by him, written by Laclos of the "Liaisons Dangereuses." The result of which comes out simply, "The third estate is the nation." On the other hand, Monseigneur d'Artois, with other princes of the blood, publishes, in solemn "memorial" to the king, that if such things be listened to, privilege, nobility, monarchy, church, state, and strong-box are in danger.† In danger truly; and yet if you do not listen, are they out of danger? It is the voice of all France, this sound that rises. Immeasurable, manifold, as the sound of outbreaking waters; wise were he who knew what to do in it—if not to fly to the mountains, and hide himself?

239. How an ideal, all-seeing Versailles government, sitting there on such principles, in such an environment, would have determined to demean itself at this new juncture, may even yet be a question. Such a government would have felt too well that its long task was now drawing to a close; that, under the guise of these states-general, at length inevitable, a new omnipotent unknown of democracy was coming into being; in presence of which no Versailles government either could or should, except in a provisory character, continue extant. To enact which provisory character, so unspeakably important, might its whole faculties but have sufficed; and so a peaceable, gradual, well-conducted abdication and Domine-dimitas have been the issue!

240. This for our ideal, all-seeing Versailles government. But for the actual, irrational Versailles government? Alas, that is a government existing there only for its own behoof; without right, except possession; and now also without might. It foresees nothing, sees nothing; has not so much as a purpose, but has only purposes—and the instinct whereby all that exists will struggle to keep existing. Wholly a vortex, in which vain counsels, hallucinations, falsehoods, intrigues, and imbecilities whirl, like withered rubbish in the meeting of winds! The Céil-de-Bœuf has its irrational hopes, if also its fears. Since hitherto all states-general have done as good as nothing, why should these do more? The commons, indeed, look dangerous; but, on the whole, is not revolt, unknown now for five generations, an impossibility? The three estates can, by management, be set against each other; the third will, as heretofore, join with the king; will, out of mere spite and self-interest, be eager to tax and vex the other two. The other two are thus delivered bound into our hands, that we may fleece them likewise. Whereupon, money being got, and the three estates all in quarrel, dismiss them, and let the future go as it can! As good Archbishop Loménie was wont to say, "There are so many accidents; and it needs but one to save us." Yes; and how many to destroy us?

241. Poor Necker in the midst of such an anarchy does what is possible for him. He looks into it with obstinately hopeful face; lauds the known rectitude of the kingly mind; listens indulgent-like to the known perverseness of the queenly and courtly—emits, if any proclamation or regulation, one favoring the tiers etat; but settling nothing; hovering afar off, rather, and advising all things to settle themselves. The grand questions, for the present, have got reduced to two—the double representation, and the vote by head. Shall the commons have a "double representation," that is to say, have as many members as the noblesse and clergy united? Shall the states-general, when once assembled, vote and deliberate, in one body, or in three separate bodies; "vote by head, or vote by class"—ordre, as they call it? These are the moot-points now filling all French with jargon, logie, and eleutheromania. To terminate which, Necker betheinks him, might not a second convocation of the notables be fittest? Such second convocation is resolved on.

242. On the 6th of November of this year 1788, these notables accordingly have reassembled, after an interval of some eighteen months. They are Calonne's old notables, the same hundred and forty-four—to show one's impartiality; likewise to save time. They sit there once again, in their seven bureaus, in the hard winter weather: it is the hardest winter since 1709; thermometer below zero of Fahrenheit, Seine river frozen over.* Cold, scarcity, and eleutheromania clamor: a changed world since these notables were "organed out," in May gone a year! They shall see now whether, under their seven princes of the blood, in their seven bureaus, they can settle the moot-points.

243. To the surprise of patriotism, these notables, once so patriotic, seem to incline the wrong way, toward the anti-patriotic side. They stagger at the double representation, at the vote by head: there is not affirmative decision; there is mere debating, and that not with the best aspects. For, indeed, were not these notables themselves mostly of the privileged classes? They clamored once; now they have their misgivings, make their dolorous representations. Let them vanish, ineffectual, and return no more! They vanish, after a month's session, on this 12th of December, year 1788—the last terrestrial notables—not to reappear any other time in the history of the world.

244. And so, the clamor still continuing, and the pamphlets, and nothing but patriotic addresses, louder... and louder, pouring in on us from all corners of France—Necker himself, some fortnight after, before the year is yet done, has to present his "Report," recommending at his own risk that same double representations; may, almost enjoining it, so loud is jargon and eleutheromania. What dubitating, what circumambulating! These whole six noisy months (for it began with Brienne in July), has not "report" followed "report," and one proclamation flown in the teeth of the other?"

245. However, that first moot-point, as we see, is now settled. As for the second, that of voting by head or by order, it unfortunately is still left hanging. It hangs there, we may say, between the privileged orders and the unprivileged, as a ready-made battle-price, and necessity of war, from the very first; which battle-price, whosoever seizes it may henceforth bear as battle-flag, with the best omen!

246. But so, at least, by royal edict of the 24th of January, does it finally, to impatient, expectant France, become not only indubitable that national deputies are to meet, but possible (so far and hardly further has the royal regulation gone) to begin electing them.

by "successive elections," and infinite elaboration and scrutiny, according to prescribed process—shall the genuine "plaints and grievances" be at length got to paper, shall the fit national representative be at length laid hold of.

249. How the whole people shakes itself, as if it had one life, and, in thousand-voiced rumor, announces that it is awake, suddenly out of long death-sleep, and will thenceforth sleep no more! The long-looked-for has come at last; wondrous news, of victory, deliverance, enfranchisement, sounds magical through every heart. To the proud, strong man it has come, whose strong hands shall no more be gyved, to whom boundless unconquered continents lie disclosed. The weary day-drudge has heard of it; the beggar with his crust moistened in tears. What! to us also has hope reached, down even to us? Hunger and hardship are not to be eternal? The bread we extorted from the rugged glebe, and, with the toil of our sinews, reaped and ground, and kneaded into loaves, was not wholly for another, then, but we, also, shall eat of it, and be filled? Glorious news (answer the prudent elders), but all too unlikely!

Thus, at any rate, may the lower people, who pay no money taxes, and have no right to vote,* assiduously crowd round those that do, and most halls of assembly, within doors and without, seem animated enough.

250. Paris alone, of towns, is to have representatives; the number of them, twenty Paris is divided into sixty districts, each of which (assembled in some church, or the like) is choosing two electors. Official deputations pass from district to district, for all is inexperience as yet, and there is endless consulting. The streets swarm strangely with busy crowds, pacific, yet restless and loquacious; at intervals is seen the gleam of military muskets, especially about the palais, where the parlement, once more on duty, sits querulous, almost tremulous.

251. Busy is the French world! In those great days, what poorest speculative craftsman but will leave his workshop, if not to vote, yet to assist in voting? On all highways is a rustling and bustling. Over the wide surface of France, ever and anon, through the spring months, as the sower casts his corn abroad upon the furrows, sounds of congregating and dispersing, of crowds in deliberation, acclamation, voting by ballot and by voice, rise disquieting toward the ear of heaven. To which political phenomena add this economical one, that trade is stagnant, and also bread getting dear; for before the rigorous winter there was, as we said, a rigorous summer, with drought, and on the 13th of July with destructive hail. What a fearful day! all cried while that tempest fell. Alas, the next anniversary of it will be a worse.* Under such aspects is France electing national representatives.

252. The incidents and specialties of these elections belong not to universal, but to local or parish history.

for which reason let not the new troubles of Grenoble or Besançon, the bloodshed on the streets of Rennes, and consequent march thither of the Breton "young men," with manifesto by their "mothers, sisters, and sweethearts," nor such-like, detain us here. It is the same sad history everywhere, with superficial variations. A reinstated parlement (as at Besançon), which stands astonished at this behemoth of a states-general it had itself evoked, starts forward with more or less audacity, to fix a thorn in its nose, and, alas, is instantaneously struck down, and hurled quite out, for the new popular force can use not only arguments but brickbats! Or else, and perhaps combined with this, it is an order of noblesse (as in Brittany), which will beforehand tie up the third estate, that it harm not the old privileges. In which act of tying up, never so skillfully set about, there is likewise no possibility of prospering; but the behemoth-Briareus snaps your cords like green rushes. Tie up? Alas, messieurs! And then, as for your chivalry rapiers, valor, and wager-of-battle, think one moment, how can that answer? The plebeian heart, too, has red life in it, which changes not to paleness at glance even of you; and "the six hundred Breton gentlemen assembled in arms, for seventy-two hours, in the Cordeliers' cloister, at Rennes," have to come out again, wiser than they entered. For the Nantes youth, the Angers youth, all Brittany, was astir; "mothers, sisters, and sweethearts" shrieking after them, March! The Breton noblesse must even let the mad world have its way.*

253. In other provinces, the noblesse, with equal good-will, finds it better to stick to protests, to well-reduced "cahiers of grievances," and satirical writings and speeches. Such is partially their course in Provence, whither, indeed, Gabriel Honoré Riquetti, Comte de Mirabeau, has rushed down from Paris to speak a word in season. In Provence, the privileged, backed by their Aix parlement, discover that such novelties, enjoined though they be by royal edict, tend to national detriment, and, what is still more indisputable, "to impair the dignity of the noblesse." Whereupon Mirabeau protesting aloud, this same noblesse, amid huge tumult within doors and without, flatly determines to expel him from their assembly. No other method, not even that of successive duels, would answer with him, the obstreperous, fierce-glaring man. Expelled he accordingly is.

254. "In all countries, in all times," exclaims he, departing, "the aristocrats have implacably pursued every friend of the people, and with tenfold implacability if such a one were himself born of the aristocracy. It was thus that the last of the Gracchi perished, by the hands of the patricians. But he, being struck with the mortal stab, flung dust toward heaven, and called on the avenging deities; and from this dust there was born Marius—Marius not so illustrious for exterminating the Cimbri as for overturning in Rome the tyranny of the nobles."* Casting up which new curious handful of dust (through the printing-press) to breed what it can and may, Mirabeau stalks forth into the third estate.

255. That he now, to ingratiate himself with this third estate, "opened a cloth-shop in Marseilles," and, for moments, became a furnishing tailor, or even the fable that he did so, is to us always among the pleasant memorabilities of this era. Stranger clothier never wielded the ell-wand and rent webs for men, or fractional parts of men. The fils adoptif is indignant at such disparaging fable,† which, nevertheless, was widely believed in those days. But, indeed, if Achilles, in the heroic ages, killed mutton, why should not Mirabeau, in the unheroic ones, measure broadcloth?

256. More authentic are his triumph-progresses through that disturbed district, with mob-jubilee, flaming torches, "windows hired for two louis," and voluntary guard of a hundred men. He is deputy elect, both of Aix and of Marseilles, but will prefer Aix. He has opened his far-sounding voice, the depths of his far-sounding soul; he can quell (such virtue is in a spoken word) the pride-tumults of the rich, the hunger-tumults of the poor; and wild mul-

257. One other incident and specialty we note, with how different an interest! It is of the parlement of Paris, which starts forward like the others (only with less audacity, seeing better how it lay), to nose-ring that behemoth of a states-general. Worthy Doctor Guillotin, respectable practitioner in Paris, has drawn up his little "plan of a cahier of dolances"—as he had not, having the wish and gift, the clearest liberty to do? He is getting the people to sign it, whereupon the surly parlement summons him to give account of himself. He goes, but with all Paris at his heels, which floods the outer courts, and copiously signs the cahier even there, while the doctor is giving account of himself within! The parlement cannot too soon dismiss Guillotin, with compliments, to be borne home shoulder-high.* This respectable Guillotin we hope to behold once more, and perhaps only once; the parlement not even once, but let it be engulfed unseen by us.

258. Meanwhile, such things, cheering as they are, tend little to cheer the national creditor, or indeed, the creditor of any kind. In the midst of universal portentous doubt, what certainty can seem so certain as money in the purse, and the wisdom of keeping it there? Trading speculation, commerce of all kinds, has, as far as possible, come to a dead pause, and the hand of the industrious lies idle in his bosom.

* "Deux Amis de la Liberte," i. 141.
Frightful enough, when now the rigor of the season has also done its part, and to scarcity of work is added scarcity of food! In the opening spring, there come rumors of forestallment; there come king's edicts, petitions of bakers against millers; and, at length, in the month of April, troops of ragged lackeys, and fierce cries of starvation! These are the thrice-famed brigands; an actual existing quantity of persons, who, long reflected and reverberated through so many millions of heads, as in concave multiplying mirrors, become a whole brigand world, and, like a kind of supernatural machinery, wondrously move the epos of the revolution. The brigands are here, the brigands are there, the brigands are coming! Not otherwise sounded the clang of Phoebus Apollo's silver bow, scattering pestilence and pale terror; for this clang, too, was of the imagination, preternatural, and it, too, walked in formless immeasurability, having made itself like to the night. (voir le soir)

But remark, at least, for the first time, the singular empire of suspicion in those lands in those days. If poor famishing men shall, prior to death, gather in groups and crowds, as the poor fieldfares and plovers do in bitter weather, were it but that they may chirp mournfully together, and misery look in the eyes of misery; if famishing men (what famishing fieldfares cannot do) should discover, once congregated, that they need not die while food is in the land, since they are many, and with empty wallets have right hands—in all this what need were there of preternatural machinery? To those people none, but not to French people in a time of revolution. These brigands (as Turgot's also were, fourteen years ago) have all been set on; enlisted, though without tap of drum, by aristocrats, by democrats, by D'Orléans, D'Artois, and enemies of the public weal. Nay, historians, to this day, will prove it by one argument: these brigands, pretending to have no victual, nevertheless contrive to drink; nay, have been seen drunk.* An unexampled fact! But, on the whole, may we not predict that a people, with such a width of credulity and of incredulity (the proper union of which makes suspicion, and, indeed, unreason generally), will see shapes enough of immortals fighting in its battle-ranks, and never want for epical machinery?

260. Be this as it may, the brigands are clearly got to Paris in considerable multitudes; with sallow faces, lank hair (the true enthusiast complexion), with sooty rags, and, also, with large clubs, which they smite angrily against the pavement! These mingle in the election tumult; would fain sign Guillotin's cahier, or any cahier or petition whatsoever, could they but write. Their enthusiast complexion, the smiting of their sticks, bodes little good to any one, least of all to rich master-manufacturers of the suburb Saint-Antoine, with whose workmen they consort.

CHAPTER III.

GROWN ELECTRIC.

261. But, now also, national deputies from all ends of France are in Paris, with their commissions, what they call pouvoirs, or powers, in their pockets, inquiring, consulting, looking out for lodgings at Versailles. The states-general shall open there, if not on the 1st, then, surely, on the 4th of May, in grand procession and gala. The Salle des Menus is all new carpentered, bedizened for them; their very costume has been fixed; a grand controversy which there was as to "slouch-hats or slouched-hats" for the commons deputies, has got as good as adjusted. Ever new strangers arrive; loungers, miscellaneous persons, officers on furlough—as the worthy Captain Dampmartin, whom we hope to be acquainted with—these, also, from all regions, have repaired hither to see what is toward. Our Paris committees, of the sixty districts, are busier than ever; it is now too clear, the Paris elections will be late.

262. On Monday, the 27th day of April, astronomer Bailly notices that the Sieur Réveillon is not at his post. The Sieur Réveillon—"extensive paper manufacturer of the Rue Saint-Antoine"—he, commonly so punctual, is absent from electoral committee, and even will never reappear there. In those "immense magazines of velvet paper" has anything befallen? Alas! yes! Alas! it is no montgolfier rising there to-day, but drudgery, rascality, and the sub-urb that is rising! Was the Sieur Réveillon, himself once a journeyman, heard to say that "a journeyman might live handsomely on fifteen sous a day?" Some seventeen half-penny. "Tis a slender sum! Or was he only thought and believed to be heard saying it? By this long chafing and friction, it would appear, the national temper has got electric.

263. Down in those dark dens, in those dark heads and hungry hearts, who knows in what strange figure the new political evangel may have shaped itself; what miraculous "communion of drudges" may be getting formed! Enough grim individuals—soon waxing to grim multitudes, and other multitudes crowding to see—beset that paper-warehouse; demonstrate in loud ungrammatical language (addressed to the passions too), the insufficiency of seventeen half-penny a day. The city watch cannot dissipate them; broils arise, and bellowings. Réveillon, at his wits' end, entreats the populace, entreats the authorities. Besenval, now in active command, commandant of Paris, does, toward evening, to Réveillon's earnest prayer, send some thirty Gardes Françaises. These clear the street, happily without firing, and take post there for the night, in hope that it may be all over.*

264. Not so; on the morrow it is far worse. Saint-Antoine has arisen anew, grimmer than ever—reinforced by the unknown tatterdemalion figures, with their enthusiastic complexion and large sticks. The city, through all streets, is flowing thitherward to see; “two cartloads of paving-stones, that happened to pass that way,” have been seized as a visible godsend. Another detachment of Gardes Françaises must be sent—Besenval and the colonel taking earnest counsel. Then still another; they hardly, with bayonets and menace of bullets, penetrate to the spot. What a sight! A street choked up with lumber, tumult, and the endless press of men. A paper warehouse eviscerated by axe and fire; mad din of revolt; musket-volleys responded to by yells, by miscellaneous missiles, by tiles raining from roof and window—tiles, execrations, and slain men!

265. The Gardes Françaises like it not, but have to persevere. All day it continues, shaking and rallying; the sun is sinking, and Saint-Antoine has not yielded. The city flies hither and thither; alas! the sound of that musket-volleying booms into the far dining-rooms of the Chaussée d’Antin, alters the dinner-gossip there. Captain Dampmartin leaves his wine; goes out with a friend or two to see the fighting. Unwashed men growl on him, with murmurs of “A bas les aristocrates (Down with the aristocrats)!” and insult the cross of St. Louis! They elbow him, and hustle him, but do not pick his pocket—as indeed at Réveillon’s, too, there was not the slightest stealing."

266. At fall of night, as the thing will not end, Besenval takes his resolution; orders out the Gardes Suisses with two pieces of artillery. The Swiss guards shall proceed thither, summon that rabble to depart, in the king’s name. If disobeyed, they shall load their artillery with grape-shot, visibly to the general eye; shall again summon; if again disobeyed, fire—and keep firing “till the last man” be in this manner blasted off, and the street clear. With which spirited resolution, as might have been hoped, the business is got ended. At sight of the lit matches, of the foreign red-coated Switzers, Saint-Antoine dissipates, hastily, in the shades of dusk. There is an encumbered street; there are “from four to five hundred” dead men. Unfortunately, Réveillon has found shelter in the Bastille; does therefrom, safe behind stone bulwarks, issue plaint protestation, explanation, for the next month. Bold Besenval has thanks from all the respectable Parisian classes, but finds no special notice taken of him at Versailles—a thing the man of true worth is used to."

267. But how it originated, this fierce electric sputter and explosion? From D’Orléans! cries the court-party; he, with his gold, enlisted these brigands—surely in some surprising manner, without sound of drum; he raked them hither, from all corners, to ferment and take fire; evil is his good. From the court! cries enlightened patriotism; it is the cursed gold and wiles of aristocrats that enlisted them, set them upon ruining an innocent Sieur Réveillon; to frighten the faint, and disgust men with the career of freedom.

* “Evénemens qui se sont passés sous mes yeux pendant la Révolution Française,” par A. H. Dampmartin (Berlin, 1796), t. 25-27.

† Besenval, III, 389.
Besnval, with reluctance, concludes that it came from "the English, our natural enemies." Or, alas, might not one rather attribute it to Diana in the shape of hunger? To some twin Dioscuri, oppression and revenge so often seen in the battles of men? Poor lackalls, all betoiled, besoiled, incrusted into dim defacement—into whom, nevertheless, the breath of the Almighty has breathed a living soul! To them it is clear only that eleutheromaniac philoposophism has yet baked no bread; that patriot committee-men will level down to their own level, and no lower. Brigands, or whatever they might be, it was bitter earnest with them. They bury their dead with the title of défenseurs de la patrie, martyrs of the good cause.

Or shall we say, insurrection has now served its apprenticeship, and this was its proof-stroke, and no inconclusive one? Its next will be a master-stroke, announcing indisputable mastership to a whole astonished world. Let that rock-fortress, tyranny's stronghold, which they name Bastille, or building—as if there were no other building—look to its guns!

But, in such wise, with primary and secondary assemblies, and cahiers of grievances; with motions, congregations of all kinds, with much thunder of froth-eloquence, and at last with thunder of platoon-musketery—does agitated France accomplish its elections. With confused winnowing and sifting, in this rather tumultuous manner, it has now (all except some remnants of Paris) sifted out the true wheat-grains of national deputies, twelve hundred and fourteen in number, and will forthwith open its states-general.

CHAPTER IV.

THE PROCESSION.

On the first Saturday of May, it is gala at Versailles, and Monday, fourth of the month, is to be a still greater day. The deputies have mostly got thither, and sought out lodgings; and are now successively, in long, well-ushered files, kissing the hand of majesty in the château. Supreme Usher de Brésé does not give the highest satisfaction; we cannot but observe that in ushering noblesse or clergy into the anointed presence, he liberally opens both his folding-doors, and, on the other hand, for members of the third estate opens only one! However, there is room to enter; majesty has smiles for all.

The good Louis welcomes his honorable members with smiles of hope. He has prepared for them the Hall of Menus, the largest near him; and often surveyed the workmen as they went on. A spacious hall; with raised platform for throne, court, and blood-royal; space for 600 commons deputies in front, for half as many clergy on this hand, and half as many noblesse on that. It has lofty galleries, wherefrom dames of honor, splendid in gaze d'or; foren, diplomacies, and other gilt-edged, white-frilled individuals, to the number of 2,000—may sit and look. Broad passages flow through it, and, outside the inner wall, all round it. There are committee-rooms, guard-rooms, robing-rooms; really a noble hall, where upholstery, aided by the subject fine-arts, has done its best, and crimson-tasseled cloths and emblematic fleur-de-lis are not wanting.

The hall is ready; the very costume, as we said, has been settled; and the commons are not to wear that hated slouch-hat (chapeau clabaud), but one not quite so slouched (chapeau rabattu). As for their manner of working when all dressed, for their "voting by head or by order" and the rest—this which it were perhaps still time to settle, and in few hours will be no longer time—remains unsettled, hangs dubious in the breast of twelve hundred men.

But now, finally, the sun, on Monday the 4th of May, has risen—unconcerned as if it were no special day. And yet, as his first rays could strike music from the Memnon's statue on the Nile, what tones were these, so thrilling, tremulous of preparation and foreboding, which he awoke in every bosom at Versailles? Huge Paris, in all conceivable and inconceivable vehicles, is pouring itself forth; from each town and village come subsidiary rills; Versailles is a very sea of men. But above all, from the church of St. Louis to the church of Notre Dame, one vast suspended-billow of life—with spray scattered even to the chimney-tops! For on chimney-tops, too, as over the roofs, and up thitherward on every lamp-iron, sign-post, break-neck coign of vantage, sits patriotic courage; and every window bursts with patriotic beauty; for the deputies are gathering at St. Louis church, to march in procession to Notre Dame and hear sermon.

275. Yes, friends, ye may sit and look, bodily or in thought, all France, and all Europe, may sit and look; for it is a day like few others. Oh, one might weep like Xerxes, so many serried rows sit perched there, like winged creatures, alighted out of heaven; all these, and so many more that follow them, shall have wholly fled aloft again, vanishing into the blue deep, and the memory of this day still be fresh. It is the baptism-day of democracy; sick Time has given it birth, the numbered months being run. The extreme-unction day of feudalism! A superannuated system of society, decrepit with toils (for has it not done much; produced you, and what ye have and know)—and with thefts and brawls, named glorious victories; and with prodigies, sensualities, and, on the whole, with dotage and senility—is now to die; and so, with death-throes and birth-throes, a new one is to be born. What a work, O earth and heavens, what a work? Battles and bloodshed, September massacres, bridges of Lodi, retreats of Moscow, Waterloo, Peterloos, ten-pound franchises, tar-barrels and guillotines—and from this present date, if one might prophesy, some two centuries of it still to fight! Two centuries, hardly less, before democracy go through its due, most balcful, stages of quackocracy; and a pestilential world be burnt up, and have begun to grow green and young again.

276. Rejoice, nevertheless, ye Versailles multitudes; to you, from whom all this is hid, the glorious end of it is visible. This day, sentence of death is pronounced on shamers; judgment of resurrection, were it but afar off, is pronounced on realities. This day it is declared aloud, as with a doom-trumpet, that a lie is unbelievable. Believe that, stand by that, if more there be not; and let what thing or things soever will follow it, follow. "Ye can no other, God be your help!" So spake a greater than any of you, opening his chapter of world-history.

277. Behold, however! The doors of St. Louis church flung wide; and the procession of processions advancing toward Notre-Dame! Shouts rend the air, one shout, at which Grecian birds might drop dead. It is, indeed, a stately, solemn sight. The elected of Fraile, and then the court of France; they are marshaled and marched there, all in prescribed place and costume. Our commons "in plain black mantle and white cravat, noblesse, in gold-worked, bright-dyed cloaks of velvet, resplendent, rustling with laces, waving with plumes; the clergy in rochet, alb, or other best pontificalibus; lastly comes the king himself, and king's household, also in their brightest blaze of pomp—their brightest and final one. Some fourteen hundred men blown together from all winds, on the deepest errand.

278. Yes, in that silent marching mass there lies futurity enough. No symbolic ark, like the old Hebrews, do these men bear, yet with them, too, is a covenant; they, too, preside at a new era in the history of men. The whole future is there, and destiny dim-brooding over it; in the hearts and unshaped thoughts of these men it lies, illegible, inevitable. Singular to think, they have it in them, yet not they, not mortal, only the Ewe above can read it—as it shall unfold itself in fire and thunder of siege and field-artillery; in the rustling of battle-banners, the tramp of hosts, in the glow of burning cities, the shriek of strangled nations! Such things lie hidden, safe-wrapt in this fourth day of May—say rather, had lain in some other unknown day, of which this latter is the public fruit and outcome. As, indeed, what wonders lie in every day—had we the sight, as happily we have not, to decipher it; for is not every meanest day "the conflux of two eternities!"

279. Meanwhile, suppose we, too, good reader, should, as now without miracle Muse Chio enables us—take our station also on some coign of vantage, and glance momentarily over this procession and this life-sea, with far other eyes than the rest do, namely, with prophetic? We can mount, and stand there, without fear of falling.

280. As for the life-sea, or onlooking unnumbered multitude, it is unfortunately all too dim. Yet as we gaze fixedly, do not nameless figures not a few, which shall not always be nameless, disclose themselves, visible or presumable there! Young Baroness de Staël—she evidently looks from a window, among older honorable women.* Her father is minister, and one of the gala personages; to his own eyes the chief one. Young spiritual amazon, thy rest is not there, nor thy loved father's: "as Malebranche saw all things in God, so M. Necker sees all things in Necker"—a theorem that will not hold.

281. But where is the brown-locked, light-behaved, fire-hearted Demoiselle Théroigne? Brown, eloquent beauty, who with thy winged words and glances shalt thrill rough bosoms, whole steel battalions, and persuade an Austrian kaiser—pike and helmet provided for thee in due season; and, alas, also, strait-waistcoat and long lodging in the Salpêtrière. Better hadst thou staid in native Luxemburg, and been the mother of some brave man's children, but it was not thy task, it was not thy lot.

282. Of the rougher sex, how, without tongue, or hundred tongues of iron, enumerate the notabilities! Has not Marquis Valadi hastily quitted his Quaker broad-brim, his Pythagorean Greek in Wapping, and the city of Glasgow? De Morande from his Courrier de l'Europe; Lingaret from his Annales, they looked eager through the London fog, and became co-editors—that they might feed the guillotine, and have their due. Does Louvet (of Faublas) stand a-tiptoe? And Brissot, high! Do Warville, friend of the blacks? He, with Marquis Condorcet and Clavigre the Genevese, have created the Moniteur newspaper, or are about creating it. Able editors must give account of such a day.

283. Or seest thou with any distinctness, low down probably, not in places of honor, a Stanislas Maillard, riding-tipstaff (huissier à cheval) of the châtelet, one of the shiftiest of men? A Captain Hullin of Geneva, Captain Elie of the Queen's Regiment; both with an air of half-pay? Jourdan, with tile-colored whiskers, not yet with tile-beard, an unjust dealer in mules? He shall be, in few months, Jourdan the Headsman, and have other work.

284. Surely, also, in some place not of honor, stands or sprawls up querulous, that he, too, though short, may see—one equaldest bleared mortal, redolent of nectar and horse-drugs—Jean Paul Marat of Neuchâtel! O Marat, renovator of human science, lecturer on optics; O thou remarkablest horse-leech, once in D'Artois's stables—as thy bleared soul looks forth, through thy bleared, dull-acrid, woe-stricken face, what sees it in all this? Any faintest light of hope, like dayspring after Nova-Zembla night? Or is it but the sulphur-light, and spectres; woe, suspicion, revenge without end?

285. Of draper Lecointre, how he shut his cloth-shop hard by, and stepped forth, one need hardly speak. Nor of Santerre, the sonorous brewer from the Faubourg St. Antoine. Two other figures, and only two, we signalize there. The huge, brawny figure, through whose black brows and rude flattened face (figure écrasée) there looks a waste energy as of Hercules not yet furibund—he is an esurient, unpro-vided advocate, Danton by name, him mark. Then that other, his slight-built comrade and craft-brother; he with the long curling locks, with the face of dingy blackguardism, wondrously irradiated with genius, as if a naphtha-lamp burnt within it; that figure is Camille Desmoulins. A fellow of infinite shrewdness, wit, may, humor; one of the sprightliest, clearest souls in all these millions. Thou poor Camille, say of thee what they may, it were but falsehood to pretend one did not almost love thee, thou headlong, lightly-sparkling man! But the brawny, not yet furibund figure, we say is Jacques Danton, a name that shall he "tolerably known in the revolution." He is president of the electoral Cordeliers district at Paris, or about to be it, and shall open his lungs of brass.

We dwell no longer on the mixed shouting multitude, for now, behold, the commons deputies are at hand!

286. Which of these 600 individuals, in plain white cravat, that have come up to regenerate France, might one guess would become their king? For a king or leader they, as all bodies of men, must have, be their work what it may; there is one man there who, by character, faculty, position, is fittest of all to do it: that man, as future, not-yet-elected king, walks there among the rest. He with the thick black locks, will it be? With the hare, as himself calls it, or black boar's-head, fit to be "shaken" as a senatorial portent? Through whose shaggy beetle-brows and rough-hewn, carbuncled face there look natu-

257. Yes, reader, that is the Type-Frenchman of this epoch, as Voltaire was of the last. He is French in his aspirations, acquisitions, in his virtues, in his vices; perhaps more French than any other man—and intrinsically such a mass of manhood too. Mark him well. The national assembly were all different without that one; may, he might say, with the old despot: "The national assembly? I am that."

288. Of a southern climate, of wild southern blood—for the Riquettis, or Arrighettis, had to fly from Florence and the Guelfs, long centuries ago, and settled in Provence, where from generation to generation they have ever approved themselves a peculiar kindred, irascible, indomitable sharp-cutting, true, like the steel they wore; of an intensity and activity that sometimes verged toward madness, yet did not reach it. One ancient Riquetti, in mad fulfillment of a mad vow, chains two mountains together, and the chain, with its "iron star of five rays," is still to be seen. May not a modern Riquetti unchain so much, and set it drifting—which also shall be seen?
289. Destiny has work for that swart, burly-headed Mirabeau; destiny has watched over him, prepared him from afar. Did not his grandfather, stout Col-d'Argent (Silver-Stock, so they named him), shattered and slashed by seven-and-twenty wounds in one fell day, lie sunk together on the bridge at Cassano, while Prince Eugene's cavalry galloped and regallopèd over him—only the flying sergeant had thrown a camp-kettle over that loved head; and Vendôme, dropping his spy-glass moaned out, "Mirabeau is dead, then!" Nevertheless, he was not dead: he awoke to breath and miraculous surgery—for Gabriel was yet to be. With his silver stock he kept his scarred head erect, through long years, and wedded, and produced tough Marquis Victor, the friend of men. Whereby at last in the appointed year, 1749, this long-expected, rough-hewn Gabriel Honoré did likewise see the light; roughest lion's-whelp ever lithered of that rough breed. How the old lion (for our old marquis, too, was lion-like, most unconquerable, kingly genial, most perverse) gazed wondering on his offspring, and determined to train him as no lion had yet been! It is in vain, O marquis! This cub, though thou slay him and slay him, will not learn to draw in dog-cart of political economy and be a friend of men; he will not be thou, but must and will be himself, another than thou. Divorce, lawsuits, "whole family save one in prison, and three-score lettres-de-cachet" for thy own sole use, do but astonish the world.

290. Our luckless Gabriel, sinned against and sinning, has been in the isle of Rhé, and heard the Atlantic from his tower; in the castle of If, and heard the Mediterranean at Marseilles. He has been in the fortress of Joux, and forty-two months, with hardly clothing to his back; in the dungeon of Vincennes—all by lettre-de-cachet, from his lion father. He has been in Pontarlier jail (self-constituted prisoner); was noticed fording estuaries of the sea (at low water), in flight from the face of men. He has pleaded before Aix parlements (to get back his wife), the public gathering on roofs, to see, since they could not hear: "The clatter-teeth (claque dents)!" snarls singular old Mirabeau; discerning in such admired forensic eloquence nothing but two clattering jawbones, and a head vacant, sonorous, of the drum species.

291. But as for Gabriel Honoré, in these strange wayfarings, what has he not seen and tried! From drill-sergeants, to prime-ministers, to foreign and domestic booksellers, all manner of men he has seen. All manner of men he has gained; for at bottom it is a social, loving heart, that wild, unconquerable one—more especially all manner of women. From the archer's dangliter at Saintes to that fair young Sophie Madame Monnier, whom he could not but "steal," and be beheaded for—in effigy! For, indeed, hardly since the Arabian prophet lay dead, to All's admiration, was there seen such a love-hero, with the strength of thirty men. In war again he has helped to conquer Corsica; fought duels, irregular brawls; horsewhipped calumnious barons. In literature, he has written on "Despotism," on "Lettres-de-Cachet," erotics Sappho-Wertceen, obscenities, profanities; books on the "Prussian Monarchy," on "Cagliostro," on "Calonne," on "The Water Companies of Paris"—each book comparable, we will say, to a bituminous alarm-fire, huge, smoky, sudden! The fire-pan, the kindling, the bitumen, were his own; but the lumber, of rags, old wood, and nameless combustible rubbish (for all is fuel to him), was gathered from hucksters, and ass-pauniers, of every description under heaven. Whereby, indeed, hucksters enough have been heard to exclaim, Out upon it, the fire is mine.

292. Nay, consider it more generally, seldom had man such a talent for borrowing. The idea, the faculty of another man he can make his; the man himself he can make his. "All reflex and echo (tout de reflet et de réverbére)!!" snarls old Mirabeau, who can see, but will not. Crabbed old friend of men! it is his sociality, his aggregative nature; and will now be the quality of qualities for him! In that forty-years' "struggle against despotism," he has gained the glorious faculty of self-help, and yet not lost the glorious natural gift of fellowship, of being helped. Rare union: this man can live self-sufficing—yet lives also in the life of other men; can make men love him, work with him; a born king of men!

293. But consider further how, as the old marquis still snarls, he has "made away with humilié, swallowed, snuffed up) all formulas"—a fact which, if we meditate it, will in these days mean much. This is no man of system, then; he is only a man of instincts and insights. A man, nevertheless, who will glare fiercely on any object, and see through it, and conquer it; for he has intellect, he has will, force beyond other men. A man not with logic-spectacles, but with an eye! Unhappily without decalogue, moral code or theorem of any fixed sort, yet not without a strong living soul in him, and sincerity there; a reality, not an artificiality, not a sham! And so he, having struggled "forty years against despotism," and "made away with all formulas," shall now become the spokesman of a nation bent to do the same. For is it not precisely the struggle of France, also, to cast off despotism, to make away with her old formulas—having found them naught, worn out, far from the reality? She will make away with such formulas, and even go bare, if need be, till she have found new ones.

294. Toward such work, in such manner, marches he, this singular Riquetti Mirabeau. In fiery rough figure, with black Samson looks under the slouch hat, he steps along there. A fiery, fuliginous mass, which could be choked and smothered, but would fill all France with smoke! And now it has got air; it will burn its whole substance, its whole smoke-atmosphere, too, and fill all France with flame. Strange lot! Forty years of that smoldering, with foul fire-damp and vapor enough; then victory over that, and like a burning mountain he blazes heaven-high, and, for twenty-three resplendent months, pours out, in flame and molten fire-torrents, all that is in him, the Pharos and wonder-signs of an amazed Europe—and then lies hollow, cold forever! Pass on, thou questionable Gabriel Honoré, the greatest of them all: in the whole national deputies, in the whole nation, there is none like and none second to thee.

295. But now, if Mirabeau is the greatest, who of these 600 may be the meanest? Shall we say, that anxious, slight, ineffectual-looking man, under thirty, in spectacles; his eyes (were the glasses off) troubled, careful; with upturned face, sniffing dimly the uncertain future time; complexion of a multiplex atrabiliar color, the final shade of which may be the pale sea-green. That greenish-colored (verdâtre) individual is an advocate of Arras; his name is Maximilien Robespierre. The son of an advocate; his father founded mason-lodges under Charles Edward, the English prince or pretender. Maximilien, the first-born, was thriftily educated; he had brisk Camille Desmoulins for school-mate in the college of Louis le Grand, at Paris. But he begged our famed necklace-cavalier, Rohan, the patron, to let him depart thence, and resign in favor of a younger brother. The strict-minded Max departed, home to paternal Arras; and even had a law-case there, and pleaded, not unsuccessfully, "in favor of the first Franklin thunder-rod." With a strict, painful mind, an understanding small but clear and ready, he grew in favor with official persons, who could foresee in him an excellent man of business, happily quite free from genius. The bishop, therefore, taking counsel, appoints him judge of his diocese, and he faithfully does justice to the people, till behold, one day, a culprit comes whose crime merits hanging, and the strict-minded Max must abdicate, for his conscience will not permit the doomming of any son of Adam to die. A strict-minded, strait-laced man! A man unfit for revolutions, whose small soul, transparent, wholesome-looking as small ale, could by no chance ferment into virulent alegar—the mother of ever-new alegar—till all France were grown acetous virulent? We shall see.

296. Between which two extremes of grandest and meanest, so many grand and mean roll on, toward their several destinies, in that procession! There is Cazalès, the learned young soldier, who shall become the eloquent orator of royalism, and earn the shadow of a name. Experined Mounier, experienced Malouet, whose presidential parliamentary experience (he stream of things shall soon leave stranded. A Pétion has left his gown and briefs at Chartres for a stormier sort of pleading; has not forgotten his violin, being fond of music. His hair is grizzled, though he is still young; convictions, beliefs placid-unalterable, are in that man; not hindmost of them, belief in himself. A Protestant-clerical Rabaut-St.-Etienne, a slender, young, eloquent, and vehement Barnave, will help to regenerate France. There are so many of them young. Till thirty the Spartans did not suffer a man to marry, but how many men here under thirty, coming to produce not one sufficient citizen, but a nation and a world of such! The old to heal up rents, the young to remove rubbish—which latter is it not, indeed, the task here?

297. Dim, formless from this distance, yet authentically there, thou noticest the deputies from Nantes? To us mere clothes-screens, with slouch-hat and cloak, but bearing in their pocket a cahier of dol­fines with this singular clause, and more such in it: “That the master wig-makers of Nantes be not troubled with new guild-brethren, the actually existing number of ninety-two being more than sufficient!” The Rennes people have elected farmer Gérard, “a man of natural sense and rectitude without any learning.” He walks there with solid step; unique, “in his rustic farmer-clothes,” which he will wear always, careless of short cloaks and costumes.

The name Gérard, or Père Gérard, Father Gérard, as they please to call him, will fly far borne about in endless banter, in royalist sàtires, in republican didàctic almanacs. As for the man Gérard, being asked once what he did, after trial of it, candidly think of this parlementary work, “I think,” answered he, “that there are a good many scoundrels among us.” So walks father Gérard, solid in his thick shoes, whithersoever bound.

298. And worthy Doctor Guillotin, whom we hoped to behold one other time? If not here, the doctor should be here—and we see him with the eye of prophecy; indeed the Parisian deputies are all a little late. Singular Guillotin, respectable practitioner; doomed by a satiric destiny to the strangest immortal glory that ever kept obscure mortal from his resting-place, the bosom of oblivion! Guillotin can improve the ventilation of the hall, in all cases of medical police and hygiène be a present aid; but, greater far, he can produce his “Report on the Penal Code,” and reveal therein a cunningly devised be­heading machine, which shall become famous and world-famous. This is the product of Guillotin’s endeavors, gained not without meditation and reading; which product popular gratitude or levity christens by a feminine derivative name, as if it were his daughter—La Guillotine! “With my machine, messieurs,” I whisk off your head (vous fais sauter la tête) in a twinkling, and you have no pain”—whereat they all laugh.* Unfortunate doctor! For two-and-twenty years he, unguillotined, shall hear nothing but guillotine, see nothing but guillotine; then dying, shall through long centuries wander, as it were, a discon­solate ghost, on the wrong side of Styx and Lethe. His name like to outlive Caesar’s.

299. See Bailly, likewise of Paris, time-honored historian of astronomy ancient and modern. Poor Bailly, how thy serenely beautiful philosophizing, with its soft moon-shiny clearness and thinness, ends in foul thick confusion—of presidency, mayorship, diplomatic officiality, rabid triviality, and the throat of everlasting darkness! Far was it to descend from the heavenly galaxy to the drapé rouge; beside that fatal dung-heap, on that last hell-day, thou must "tremble," though only with cold—"de froid." Speculation is not practice: to be weak is not so miserable, but to be weaker than our task. Woe the day when they mounted thee, a peaceable pedestrian on that wild hippocrof of a democracy, which, spurning the firm earth, nay, lashing at the very stars, no yet known Astolpho could have ridden!

300. In the commons deputies there are merchants, artists, men of letters, 374 lawyers,* and at least one clergyman, the Abbé Sieyes. Him also Paris sends among its twenty. Behold him, the light, thin man; cold, but elastic, wiry; instinct with the pride of logic; passionless, or with but one passion, that of self-conceit. If, indeed, that can be called a passion, which, in its independent concentrated greatness, seems to have soared into transcendentalism; and to sit there with a kind of godlike indifference, and look down on passion! He is the man, and wisdom shall die with him. This is the Sieyes who shall be system-builder, constitution-builder general, and build constitutions (as many as wanted) sky-high—which shall all unfortunately fall before he get the scaffolding away. "La politique," said he to D'Orlans, "polity is a science I think I have completed (achevée)."† What things, O Sieyes, with thy clear assiduous eyes, art thou to see! But were it not curious to know how Sieyes, now in these days (for he is said to be still alive)* looks out on all that constitution masonry, through the rheumy soberness of extreme age? Might we hope, still with the old irrefragable transcendentalism? The victorious cause pleased the gods, the vanquished one pleased Sieyes (victa Catoni).

Thus, however, amid sky-rending vivats, and blessings from every heart, has the procession of the commons deputies rolled by.

301. Next follow the noblesse, and next the clergy; concerning both of whom it might be asked what they specially have come for. Specially, little as they dream of it, to answer this question, put in a voice of thunder: What are you doing in God's fair earth and task-garden, where whosoever is not working is begging or stealing? Woe, woe to themselves and to all, if they can only answer, Collecting tithes, preserving game. Remark, meanwhile, how D'Orleans affects to step before his own order and mingle with the commons. For him are vivats; few for the rest, though all wave in plumed "liats of a feudal cut," and have sword on thigh; though among them is D'Antraigues, the young Languedocian gentleman—and, indeed, many a peer more or less noteworthy. 302. There are Liancourt and La Rochefoucault, the liberal Anglomaniac dukes. There is a filially pious Lally; a couple of liberal Lameths. Above all, there is a Lafayette, whose name shall be Cromwell—

* A. D. 1834.
Grandison, and fill the world. Many a "formula" has this Lafayette, too, made away with; yet not all formulas. He sticks by the Washington formula; and by that he will stick—and hang by it, as by sure bower-anchor hangs and swings the tight war-ship, which, after all changes of wildest weather and water, is found still hanging. Happy for him, be it glorious or not! Alone of all Frenchmen he has a theory of the world, and right mind to conform thereto; he can become a hero and perfect character, were it but the hero of one idea. Note, further, our old parliamentary friend, Crispin-Catiline d'Espré-ménin. He is returned from the Mediterranean islands, a red-hot royalist, repentant to the finger-ends, unsettled-looking; whose light, dusky-glowing at best, now flickers foul in the socket; whom the national assembly will by and by, to save time, "regard as in a state of distraction." Note lastly that globular younger Mirabeau, indignant that his elder brother is among the commons; it is Viscounte Mirabeau; named oftener Mirabeau Tonneau (Barrel Mirabeau), on account of his rotundity, and the quantities of strong liquor he contains.

303. There, then, walks our French noblesse. All in the old pomp of chivalry: and yet, alas, how changed from the old position, drifted far down from their native latitude, like Arctic icebergs got into the equatorial sea, and fast thawing there! Once these chivalry duces (dukes, as they are still named) did actually lead the world—were it only toward battle-spoil, where lay the world's best wages then; moreover, being the ablest leaders going, they had their lion's share, those duces, which none could grudge them. But now, when so many looms, improved plow-shares, steam-engines, and bills of exchange have been invented; and, for battle-brawling itself, men hire drill-sergeants at eighteen pence a day—what mean these gold-mantled chivalry figures, walking there "in black-velvet cloaks," in high-plumed "hats of a feudal cut?" Reeds shaken in the wind!

304. The clergy have got up, with cahiers for abolishing pluralities, enforcing residence of bishops, better payment...we can observe, walk stately, apart from the numerous undignified—who, indeed, are properly little other than commons disguised in curate-frocks. Here, however, though by strange ways, shall the precept be fulfilled, and they that are greatest (much to their astonishment) become least. For one example out of many, mark that plausible Grégoire: one-day Curé Grégoire shall be a bishop, when the now stately are wandering distracted, as bishops in partibus. With other thought, mark also the Abbé Maury, his broad bold face, mouth accurately primmed, full eyes, that ray out intelligence, falsehood—the sort of sophistry which is astonished you should find it sophistical. Skillfulst vampier-up of old rotten leather, to make it look like new; always a rising man; he used to tell Mercier, "You will see, I shall be in the Academy.

* "Hist. Parl." i. 322-327.
before you. Likely, indeed, thou skillfullest Maury; may, thou shalt have a cardinal's hat, and plush and glory; but alas, also, in the long-run—mere oblivion, like the rest of us, and six feet of earth! What boots it, vamping rotten leather on these terms? Glorious in comparison is the livelihood thy good old father earns by making shoes—one may hope, in a sufficient manner. Maury does not want for audacity. He shall wear pistols by and by; and, at death-cries of 'La lanterne, The lamp-iron!' answer coolly, 'Friends, will you see better there?'

305. But yonder, halting lanely along, thou noticest next Bishop Talleyrand-Perigord, his reverence of Autun. A sarcastic grimness lies in that irreverent reverence of Autun. He will do and suffer strange things; and will become surely one of the strangest things ever seen, or like to be seen. A man living in falsehood and on falsehood, yet not what you call a false man—there is the specialty! It will be an enigma for future ages, one may hope: hitherto such a product of nature and art was possible only for this age of ours—age of paper, and of the burning of paper. Consider Bishop Talleyrand and Marquis Lafayette as the topmost of their two kinds, and say once more, looking at what they did and what they were, O tempests ferox rerum!

306. On the whole, however, has not this unfortunate clergy also drifted in the time-stream, far from its native latitude? An anomalous mass of men; of whom the whole world has already a dim understanding that it can understand nothing. They were once a priesthood, interpreters of wisdom, revealers of the holy that is in man; a true clerics (of inheritance of God on earth); but now? They pass silently, with such cahiers as they have been able to redact; and none cries, God bless them.

307. King Louis with his court brings up the rear; he cheerful, in this day of hope, is saluted with plaudits; still more Necker his minister. Not so the queen, on whom hope shines not steadily any more. Ill-fated queen! Her hair is already gray with many cares and crosses; her first-born son is dying in these weeks; black falsehood has ineffaceably soiled her fair name—ineffaceably while this generation lasts. Instead of Vive le reine, voices insult her with Vive d'Orléans. Of her queenly beauty little remains except its stateliness; not now gracious, but haughty, rigid, silently enduring. With a most mixed feeling, wherein joy has no part, she resigns herself to a day she hoped never to have seen. Poor Marie Antoinette; with thy quick, noble instincts, vehement glancings, vision all too fitful narrow for the work thou hast to do! Oh! there are tears in store for thee; bitterest outcries, soft womanly meltings, though thou hast the heart of an imperial Theresa's daughter. Thou doomed one, shut thy eyes on the future!

308. And so, in stately procession, have passed the elected of France. Some toward honor and quick fire-consummation; most toward dishonor; not a few toward massacre, confusion, emigration, desperation;
I toward eternity! So many heterogeneities cast together into the fermenting-vat; there, with incalculable action, counteraction, elective affinities, explosive developments, to work out healing for a sick, moribund system of society! Probably the strangest body of men, if we consider well, that ever met together on our planet on such an errand. So thousandfold complex a society, ready to burst up from its infinite depths; and these men, its rulers and healers, without life-rule for themselves—other life-rule than a gospel according to Jean Jacques! To the wisest of them, what we must call the wisest, man is properly an accident under the sky. Man is without duty round him; except it be “to make the constitution.” He is without heaven above him, or hell beneath him; he has no God in the world.

309. What further or better belief can be said to exist in these twelve hundred? Belief in high plumed hats of a feudal cut; in heraldic scutcheons; in the divine right of kings, in the divine right of game destroyers. Belief, or what is still worse, canting half-belief; or worst of all, mere Machiavellian pretense-of-belief—in consecrated dough-wafers, and the Godhood of a poor old Italian man! Nevertheless, in that immeasurable confusion and corruption, which struggles there so blindy to become less confused and corrupt, there is, as we said, this one salient point of a new life discernible—the deep fixed determination to have done with sham. A determination which, consciously or unconsciously, is fixed; which waxes ever more fixed, into very madness and fixed-idea; which in such embodiment as lies provided there, shall now unfold itself rapidly; monstrous, stupendous, unspeakable; new for long thousands of years! How has the heaven’s light, oftentimes in this earth, to clothe itself in thunder and electric murkiness, and descend as molten lightning, blasting, if purifying! Nay, is it not rather the very murkiness, and atmospheric suffocation, that brings the lightning and the light? The new evangel, as the old had been, was it to be born in the destruction of a world?

310. But how the deputies assisted at high mass, and heard sermon, and applauded the preacher, church as it was, when he preached polities; how, next day, with sustained pomp, there are, for the first time, installed in their Salle des Menus (hall no longer of amusements), and become a states-general—readers can fancy for themselves. The king from his estrade, gorgeous as Solomon in all his glory, runs his eye over that majestic hall; many-plumed, many-glancing; bright-tinted as rainbow, in the galleries and near side-spaces, where beauty sets raining bright influence. Satisfaction as of one that after long voyaging had got to port, plays over his broad simple face—the innocent king! He rises and speaks, with sonorous tone, a conceivable speech. With which—still more with the succeeding one-hour and two hours’ speeches of Garde-des-Sceaux and M. Necker, full of nothing but patriotism, hope, faith, and deficiency of the revenue—no reader of these pages shall be tried.

311. We remarked only that, as his majesty, on finishing the speech, put on his plumed hat, and the noblesse according to custom imitated him, our tiers-état deputies did mostly, not without a shade of fierceness, in like manner clap on, and even crush on their slouched hats, and stand there awaiting the issue. Thick buzz among them, between majority and minority, of Couvrez-vous, Découvrez-vous (Hats off Hats on)! To which his majesty puts an end by taking off his own royal hat again.

The session terminates without further accident or omen than this; with which, significantly enough, France has opened her states-general.

* "Histoire Parlementaire" (p. 333). Mercier, "Nouveau Paris," etc.
ner (say, an Italian gonfalon, in its old republican carroccio); and shall tower up, car-borne, shining in the wind; and with iron tongue peal forth many a signal. A thing of prime necessity; which, whether in the van or in the center, whether leading or led and driven, must do the fighting multitude incalculable services. For a season, while it floats in the very front, nay, as it were, stands solitary there, waiting whether force will gather round it, this same national carroccio, and the signal-peals it rings, are a main object with us.

314. The omen of the "slouch-hats clapt on" shows the common deputies to have made up their minds on one thing, that neither noblesse nor clergy shall have precedence of them, hardly even majesty itself. To such length has the "Contrat Social" and force of public opinion carried us. For what is majesty but the delegate of the nation, delegated and bargained with (even rather tightly)—in some very singular posture of affairs, which Jean Jacques has not fixed the date of?

315. Coming therefore into their hall on the morrow, an inorganic mass of 600 individuals, these common deputies perceive, without terror, that they have it all to themselves. Their hall is also the grand or general hall for all three orders. But the noblesse and clergy, it would seem, have retired to their two separate apartments or halls, and are there "verifying their powers," not in a conjoint, but in a separate capacity. They are to constitute two separate, perhaps separately-voting orders, then? It is as if both noblesse and clergy had silently taken for granted that they already were such! Two orders against one, and so the third order to be left in a perpetual minority?

316. Much may remain unfixed; but the negative of that is a thing fixed in the slouch-hatted heads, in the French nation's head. Double representation, and all else hitherto gained, were otherwise futile, null. Doubtless the "powers must be verified"—doubtless the commission, the electoral documents of your deputy must be inspected by his brother deputies, and found valid; it is the preliminary of all. Neither is this question, of doing it separately or doing it conjointly, a vital one; but if it lead to such? It must be resisted; wise was that maxim, resist the beginnings! Nay, were resistance unadvisable, even dangerous, yet surely pause is very natural—pause, with twenty-five millions behind you, may become resistance enough. The inorganic mass of commons deputies will restrict itself to a "system of inertia," and for the present remain inorganic.

317. Such method, recommendable alike to sagacity and to timidity, do the commons deputies adopt; and, not without adroitness, and with evermore tenacity, they persist in it day after day, week after week. For six weeks their history is of the kind named barren, which indeed, as philosophy knows, is often the fruitfulness of all. These were their still creation-days, wherein they sat incubating! In fact, what they did was to do nothing in a judicious manner. Daily the inorganic body reassembles; regrets that they cannot get organization, "verification of powers in common," and begin regenerating France.
Headlong motions may be made, but let such be repressed; inertia alone is at once unpunishable and uncomparable.

318. Cunning must be met by cunning, proud pret-tension by inertia, by a low tone of patriotic sorrow;
low, but incurable, unalterable. Wise as serpents, harmless as doves, what a spectacle for France! Six hundred inorganic individuals, essential for its regeneration and salvation, sit there on their elliptic beuches, longing passionately toward life, in painful durance, like souls waiting to be born. Speeches are spoken, eloquent, audible within doors and without.
Mind agitates itself against mind, the nation looks with ever deeper interest. Thus do the commons deputies sit incubating.

319. There are private conclaves, supper-parties, consultations, Breton club, club of Virolay, gers of many clubs. Wholly an element of confused noise, dimmness, angry heat—wherein, however, the Eroseegg, kept at the fit temperature, may, sooner safe, unbroken ill it be hatched. In your Mouniers, Malonets, Lechapeliers, is science sufficient for that; servor in your Barnaves, Rabants. At times shall come an inspiration from royal Mirabeau: he is nowise yet recognized as royal; nay, he was "groaned at" when his name was first mentioned, but he is struggling toward recognition.

320. In the course of the week, the commons having called their eldest to the chair, and furnished him with young, stronger-lunged assistants, can speak articulately; and in audible lamentable words declare, as we said, that they are an inorganic body longing to become organic. Letters arrive; but an inorganic body cannot open letters, they lie on the table unopened. The eldest may at most procure for himself some kind of list or muster-roll, to take the votes by, and wait what will betide. Noblesse and clergy are all elsewhere; however, an eager public crowds all galleries and vacancies, which is some comfort. With effort it is determined, not that a deputation shall be sent—for how can an inorganic body send deputations?—but that certain individual commons members shall, in an accidental way, stroll into the clergy chamber and then into the noblesse

one, and mention there as a thing they have happened to observe, that the commons seem to be sitting waiting for them, in order to verify their powers. That is the wiser method!

321. The clergy, among whom are such a multitude of undignified, of mere commons in curates' frocks, depute instant respectful answer that they are, and will now more than ever be, in deepest study as to that very matter. Contrariwise the noblesse, in cavalier attitude, reply after four days, that they, for their part, are all verified and constituted, which, they had trusted, the commons also were; such separate verification being clearly the proper constitutional wisdom-of-ancestors method—
as they the noblesse will have much pleasure in demonstrating by a commission of their number, if the commons will meet them, commission against commission! Directly in the rear of which comes a deputation of clergy, reiterating, in their insidious conciliatory way, the same proposal. Here, then, is a complexity; what will wise commons say to this?

322. Warily, inertly, the wise commons, considering that they are, if not a French third estate, at least an aggregate of individuals pretending to some title of that kind, determine, after talking on it five days, to name such a commission—though, as it were, with proviso not to be convinced; a sixth day is taken up in naming it; a seventh and an eighth day in getting the forms of meeting, place, hour, and the like, settled: so that it is not till the evening of the 23d of May that noblesse commission first meets commons commission, clergy acting as conciliators; and begins the impossible task of convincing it. One other meeting, on the 25th, will suffice; the commons are inconvincible, the noblesse and clergy irrefragably convincing; the commissions retire, each order persisting in its first pretensions.*

323. Thus have three weeks passed. For three weeks, the third-estate carroccio, with far-seen gonfalon, has stood stock-still, flouting the wind, waiting what force would gather round it.

Fancy can conceive the feeling of the court, and how counsel met counsel, and loud-sounding inanity whirled in that distracted vortex, where wisdom could not dwell. Your cunningly devised taxing-machine has been got together, set up with incredible labor, and stands there, its three pieces in contact, its two fly-wheels of noblesse and clergy, its huge working-wheel of tiers-état. The two fly-wheels whirl in the softest manner, but, prodigious to look upon, the huge working-wheel hangs motionless, refuses to stir! The cunningest engineers are at fault. How will work when it...oes begin? Fearfully, my friends, and to many purposes; but to gather taxes or grind court-meal, one may apprehend, never. Could we but have continued gathering taxes by hand! Messeigneurs d'Artois, Conti, Conde (named court triumvirate), they of the anti-democratic "Mémoire an Roi," has not their foreboding proved true? They may wave reproachfully their high heads, they may beat their poor brains, but the cunningest engineers can do nothing. Necker himself, were he even listened to, begins to look blue. The only thing one sees advisable is to bring up soldiers. New regiments, two, and a battalion of a third, have already reached Paris; others shall get in march. Good were it in all circumstances to have troops within reach; good that the command were in sure hands. Let Broglie be appointed; old Marshal Duke de Broglie, veteran disciplinarian, of firm drill-sergeant morality, such as may be depended on.

324. For, alas! neither are the clergy nor the very noblesse what they should be, and might be, when so menaced from without; entire, undivided within. The noblesse, indeed, have their Catiline or Crispin d'Espréménil, dusky-glowing, all in renegade heat; their boisterous Barrel Mirabeau; but also they have their Lafayette, Lamour, Lameth; above all, their D'Orléans, now cut forever from his court-moorings, and musing drowsily of high and highest sea-prizes (for is not he too a son of Henri Quatre, and partial potential heir-apparent?) on his voyage toward chaos. From the clergy again, so numerous are the curés, actual deserters have run over: two small parties, in the second party Cure Grégoire. Nay, there is talk of a whole hundred and forty-nine of them about to desert in mass, and only restrained by an archbishop of Paris. It seems a losing game.

325. But judge if France, if Paris, sat idle all this while. Addresses from far and near flow in; for our commons have now grown organic enough to open letters. Or indeed to cavil at them! Thus poor Marquis de Brézé, supreme usher, master of ceremonies, or whatever his title was, writing about this time on some ceremonial matter, sees no harm in winding up with a "Monsieur, yours with sincere attachment." "To whom does it address itself, this sincere attachment?" inquires Mirabeau. "To the dean of the tiers-état." "There is no man in France entitled to write that," rejoins he, whereat the galleries and the world will not be kept from applauding. Poor De Brézé! These commons have a still older grudge at him, nor has he yet done with them.

326. In another way Mirabeau has had to protest against the quick suppression of his newspaper, * "Moniteur," (in "Histoire Parlementaire," i. 429).
round him within, a crowd listening from without, open-mouthed, through open door and window, with "thunders of applause for every sentiment of more than common hardness." In Monsieur Dessein's pamphlet-shop, close by, you cannot without strong elbowing get to the counter; every hour produces its pamphlets, or litter of pamphlets; "there were thirteen to-day, sixteen yesterday, ninety-two last week."* Think of tyranny and scarcity, servile eloquence, rumor, pamphleteering, Société Publicole, Breton Club, Enraged Club—and whether every tap-room, coffee-room, social reunion, accidental street-group, over wide France, was not an enraged club!

329. To all which the commons deputies can only listen with a sublime inertia of sorrow, reduced to busy themselves "with their internal police." Surer position no deputies ever occupied, if they keep it with skill. Let not the temperature rise too high; break not the Eros-egg till it be hatched, till it break itself! An eager public crowds all galleries and vacancies—"cannot be restrained from applauding." The two privileged orders, the noblesse, all verified and constituted, may look on with what face they will, not without a secret tremor of heart. The clergy, always acting the part of conciliators, make a clutch at the galleries, and the popularity there, and miss it. Deputation of them arrives, with dolorous message about the "dearth of grains," and the necessity there is of casting aside vain formalities, and deliberating on this. An insidious proposal, which, however, the commons (moved thereto by sea-green Robespierre) dexterously accept as a sort of hint, or even pledge, that the clergy will forthwith come over to them, constitute the states-general, and so cheapen grains!* Finally, on the 27th day of May, Mirabeau, judging the time now nearly come, proposes that "the inertia cease;" that, leaving the noblesse to their own stiff ways, the clergy be summoned, "in the name of the God of peace," to join the commons, and begin.† To which summons, if they turn a deaf ear—we shall see! Are not 140 of them ready to desert?

330. O triumvirate of princes, new Garde-des-Sceaux Barentin, thou Home Secretary Breteuil, Duchess Polignac, and queen eager to listen, what is now to be done? This third estate will get in motion, with the force of all France in it, clergy machinery with noblesse machinery, which were to serve as beautiful counter-balances and drag, will be shamefully dragged after it, and take fire along with it. What is to be done? The Céu-de-Roüs waxes more confused than ever. Whisper and counter-whisper; a very tempest of whispers! Leading men from all the three orders are nightly spirited thither; conjurors, many of them, but can they conjure this? Necker himself were now welcome, could he interfere to purpose.

331. Let Necker interfere, then, and in the king's name! Happily that incendiary "God-of-peace" message is not yet answered. The three orders shall again have conferences; under this patriot minister of theirs, somewhat may be healed, clouted up, we meanwhile getting forward Swiss regiments and a "hundred pieces of field artillery." This is what the États-General, for its part, resolves on.

332. But as for Necker—alas, poor Necker, thy obstinate third estate has one first-last word, verification in common, as the pledge of voting and deliberating in common! Half-way proposals, from such a tried friend, they answer with a stare. The tardy conferences speedily break up; the third estate, now ready and resolute, the whole world backing it, returns to its hall of the three orders, and Necker to the États-General, with the character of a disconjurer there—fit only for dismissal.*

333. And so the commons deputies are at last on their own strength getting under way? Instead of chairman, or dean, they have now got a president—astronomer Bailly. Under way, with a vengeance! With endless, vociferous, and temperate eloquence, borne on newspaper wings to all lands, they have now, on this 17th day of June, determined that their name is not third estate, but national assembly! They, then, are the nation? Triumvirate of princes, queen, refractory noblesse, and clergy, what, then, are you? A most deep question—scarcely answerable in living political dialects.

334. All regardless of which, our new national assembly proceeds to appoint a "committee of subsistences," dear to France, though it can find little or no grain. Next, as if our national assembly stood quite firm on its legs, to appoint "four other standing committees," then to settle the security of the national debt, then that of the annual taxation, all within eight-and-forty hours. At such rate of velocity it is going, the conjurers of the États-General may well ask themselves, whither?

CHAPTER II.

MERCURY DE BREZÉ.

335. Now surely were the time for a "god from the machine," there is a nodus worthy of one. The only question is, which god? Shall it be Mars de Broglio, with his hundred pieces of cannon? Not yet, answers prudence, so soft, irresolute, is King Louis. Let it be messenger Mercury, our Supreme Usher de Brézé!

336. On the morrow, which is the 20th of June, these hundred and forty-nine false curates, no longer restrainable by his grace of Paris, will desert in a body; let De Brézé intervene, and produce—closed doors! Not only shall there be royal session in that Salle des Measns, but no meeting, nor working (except by carpenters), till then. Your third estate, self-styled "national assembly," shall suddenly see itself extruded from its hall, by carpenters, in this dexterous way, and reduced to do nothing, not even to meet, or articulately lament, till majesty, with séance royale and new miracles, be ready! In this manner shall De Brézé, as Mercury ex machina, intervene, and, if the Ciel-de-Boeuf mistake not, work deliverance from the nodus.

337. Of poor De Brézé we can remark that he has yet prospered in none of his dealings with these commons. Five weeks ago, when they kissed the hand of majesty, the mode he took got nothing but censure; and then his "sincere attachment," how was it scornfully whiffed aside! Before supper this night he writes to President Bailly a new letter, to be delivered shortly after dawn to-morrow, in the king's name. Which letter, however, Bailly, in the pride of office, will merely crush together into his pocket, like a bill he does not mean to pay.

338. Accordingly on Saturday morning the 20th of June, shrill-sounding heralds proclaim, through the streets of Versailles, that there is to be séance royale next Monday, and no meeting of the states-general till then. And yet, we observe, President Bailly, in sound of this, and with De Brézé's letter in his pocket, is proceeding, with national assembly at his heels, to the accustomed Salle des Menus, as if De Brézé and heralds were mere wind. It is shut, this salle, occupied by gardes Françaises. "Where is your captain?" The captain shows his royal order: workmen, he is grieved to say, are all busy setting up the platform for his majesty's séance; most unfortunately no admission; admission, at furthest, for president and secretaries to bring away papers, which the joiners might destroy! President Bailly enters with secretaries and returns bearing papers; alas, within doors, instead of patriotic eloquence, there is now no noise but hammering, sawing, and operative screeching and rumbling! A profanation without parallel.

339. The deputies stand grouped on the Paris road, on this unbrave Avenue de Versailles; complaining aloud of the indignity done them. Courtiers, it is supposed, look from their windows and giggle. The morning is none of the comfortablest; raw, it is even drizzling a little.* But all the travelers pause; patriot gallery-men, miscellaneous spectators increase the groups. Wild counsels alternate. Some desperate deputies propose to go and hold session on the great outer staircase at Marly, under the king's windows; for his majesty, it seems, has driven over thither. Others talk of making the Château Forecourt, what they call Place d'Armes, a Runnymede and new Champ de Mai of free Frenchmen; nay, of awakening to sounds of indignant patriotism the echoes of the Ciel-de-Boeuf itself. Notice is given that President Bailly, aided by judicious Guillotin and others, has found place in the tennis-court of the Rue St. François. Thither, in long-drawn files, horse-jingling, like cranes on wing, the common deputies angrily wend.

340. Strange sight was this in the Rue St. François, Vieux Versailles! A naked tennis-court, as the pictures of that time still give it; four walls, naked, except aloft some poor wooden penthouse, or roofed spectators' gallery hanging round them—on the floor not now an idle tee-heeing, a snipping of balls and rackets; but the bellowing din of an indignant national representation, scandalously exiled hither! However, a cloud of witnesses looks down on them from wooden penthouse, from wall-top, from adjoining roof and chimney, rolls toward them from all quarters, with passionate spoken blessings. Some table can be procured to write on; some chair, if not to sit on, then to stand on. The secretaries undo their tapes; Bailly has constituted the assembly.

341. Experienced Mounier, not wholly new to such things, in parliamentary revolts, which he has seen or heard of, thinks that it were well, in these lamentable threatening circumstances, to unite themselves by an oath. Universal acclamation, as from smoldering bosoms getting vent. The oath is redacted, pronounced aloud by President Bailly—and, indeed, in such a sonorous tone that the cloud of witnesses, even out-doors, hear it, and bellow response to it. Six hundred right-hands rise with President Bailly's, to take God above to witness that they will not separate for man below, but will meet in all places, under all circumstances, wherever two or three can get together, till they have made the constitution. Made the constitution, friends! That is a long task. Six hundred hands, meanwhile, will sign as they have sworn; six hundred save one, one loyalist Abdiel, still visible by this sole light-point, and namable, poor "M. Martin d'Auch, from Castelnaudary, in Languedoc." Him they permit to sign or signify refusal; they even save him from the cloud of witnesses, by declaring "his head deranged." At four o'clock, the signatures are all appended; new meeting is fixed for Monday morning, earlier than the hour of the royal session, that our hundred and forty-nine clerical deserters be not balked; we will meet "at the Recollets church or elsewhere," in hope that our hundred and forty-nine will join us—and now it is time to go to dinner.

342. This, then, is the Session of the Tennis-Court, famed SÉance du Jeu de Paume; the fame of which has gone forth to all lands. This is Mercurius de Brézé's appearance as Deus ex machina; this is the fruit it brings! The giggle of courtiers in the Versailles avenue has already died into gaunt silence. Did the distracted court, with Garde-des-Sceaux Barrentin, Triumvirate and Company, imagine that they could scatter 600 national deputies, big with national constitution, like as much barn-door poultry, big with next to nothing—by the white or black rod of a supreme usher? Barn-door poultry fly cackling, but national deputies turn round, lion-faced, and, with uplifted right-hand, swear an oath that makes the four corners of France tremble.

343. President Bailly has covered himself with honor, which shall become rewards. The national assembly is now doubly and trebly the nation's assembly; not militant, martyred only, but triumphant, insulted, and which could not be insulted. Paris disembogues itself once more, to witness, "with grim looks," the séance royale;* which, by a new felicity, is postponed till Tuesday. The hundred and forty-nine, and even with bishops among them, all in processional mass, have had free leisure to march off and solemnly join the commons sitting waiting in their church. The commons welcomed them with shouts, with embracings, nay, with tears;† for it is growing a life-and-death matter now.

344. As for the séance itself, the carpenters seem to have accomplished their platform, but all else remains unaccomplished. Futile, we may say fatal, was the whole matter. King Louis enters, through seas of people, all grim-silent, angry with many things—for it is a bitter rain too. Enters, to a third estate, likewise grim-silent, which has been wetted waiting under mean porches, at back-doors, while court and privilege were entering by the front. King and Garde-des-Sceaux (there is no Necker visible) make known, not without long-windedness, the determinations of the royal breast. The three orders shall vote separately. On the other hand, France may look for considerable constitutional blessings, as specified in these five-and-thirty articles,‡ which Garde-des-Sceaux is waxing hoarse with reading. Which five-and-thirty articles, adds his majesty, again rising, if the three orders most unfortunately cannot agree together to effect them, I myself will effect: "Seul je ferai le bien de mes peuples."—which being interpreted may signify, You, contentious deputies of the states-general, have probably not long to be here! But, in fine, all shall now withdraw for this day, and meet again, each order in its separate place, to-morrow morning, for dispatch of business. This is the determination of the royal breast, pithy and clear. And herewith king, retinue, noblesse, majority of clergy, file out, as if the whole matter were satisfactorily completed.

345. These file out through grim-silent seas of people. Only the commons deputies file not out, but stand there in gloomy silence, uncertain what they shall do. One man of them is certain, one man of them discerns and dares! It is now that King Mirabeau starts to the tribune, and lifts up his lion-voice. Verily a word in season, for, in such scenes, the moment is the mother of ages! Had not Gabriel Hou­ord been there—one can well fancy, how the commons deputies, affrighted at the perils which now yawned dim all round them, and waxing ever paler in each other's paleness, might very naturally, one after one, have glided off; and the whole course of European history have been different!

346. But he is there. Listen to the bravoi of that royal forest-voice; sorrowful, low, fast swelling to a roar! Eves kindle at the glance of his eye: National deputies were missioned by a nation, they have sworn an oath, they—But lo! while the lion's voice roars loudest, what apparition is this? Appear-tion of Mercurius de Brézé, muttering somewhat: "Speak out," cry several. "Messieurs," shrills De Brézé, repeating himself, "you have heard the king's orders!" Mirabeau glares on him with fire-flashing face, shakes the black lion's mane: "Yes, monsieur, we have heard what the king was advised to say, and you, who cannot be the interpreter of his orders to the states-general; you, who have neither place nor right of speech here; you are not the man to remind us of it. Go, monsieur, tell those who sent you that we are here by the will of the people, and that nothing but the force of bayonets shall send us hence!"* And poor De Brézé shivers forth from the national assembly—and also (if it be not in one faintest glimmer, months later) finally from the page of history!

347. Hapless De Brézé; doomed to survive long ages in men's memory, in this faint way, with tremulant white rod! He was true to etiquette, which was his faith here below, a martyr to respect of persons. Short woolen cloaks could not kiss majesty's hand as long velvet ones did. Nay, lately, when the poor little dauphin lay dead, and some ceremonial visitation came, was he not punctual to announce it even to the dauphin's dead body—"Monseigneur, a deputation of the states-general?" Sunt lacryme rerum.

348. But what does the Ciel-de-Boeuf, now when De Brézé shivers back thither? Dispatch that same force of bayonets? Not so, the seas of people still hang multitudinous, intent on what is passing; nay, rush and roll, loud-billowing, into the courts of the château itself, for a report has risen that Necker is to be dismissed. Worst of all, the Gardes Françaises seem indisposed to act; "two companies of them do not fire when ordered!"* Necker, for not being at the séance, shall be shouted for, carried home in triumph, and must not be dismissed. His grace of Paris, on the other hand, has to fly, with broken coach-panels, and owe his life to furious driving. The gardes-du-corps (body-guards), which you were drawing out, had better be drawn in again.† There is no sending of bayonets to be thought of.

349. Instead of soldiers, the Ciel-de-Boeuf sends—carpenters, to take down the platform. Ineffectual shift! In few instants the very carpenters cease wrenching and knocking at their platform, standing on it hammer in hand, and listen open-mouthed. The third estate is decreeing that it is, was, and will be nothing but a national assembly; and now, moreover, an inviolable one, all members of it inviolable: "infamous, traitorous toward the nation, and guilty of capital crime, is any person, body-corporate, tribunal, court or commission, that now or henceforth, during the present session or after it, shall dare to pursue, interrogate, arrest, or cause to be arrested, detain or cause to be detained, any... etc., etc., on whose part nearer the same be commanded,"‡ Which done, one can wind up with this comfortable reflection from Abbé Sieyes, "Messieurs, you are to-day what you were yesterday."

350. Courtiers may shriek; but it is, and remains, even so. Their well-charged explosion has exploded through the touch-hole; covering themselves with scorches, confusion, and unseemly soot! Poor triumvirate, poor queen; and, above all, poor queen’s husband, who means well, had he any fixed meaning! Folly is that wisdom which is wise only behindhand.

Few months ago these thirty-five concessions had filled France with a rejoicing which might have lasted for several years. Now it is unavailing, the very mention of it slighted; majesty’s express orders set at naught.

351. All France is in a roar; a sea of persons, estimated at 10,000, whirls “all this day in the Palais Royal.” The remaining clergy, and likewise some forty-eight noblesse, D’Orléans among them, have now forthwith gone over to the victorious commons —by whom, as is natural, they are received “with acclamation.”

352. The third estate triumphs; Versailles town shouting round it; 10,000 whirling all day in the Palais Royal; and all France standing a-tiptoe, not unlike whirling! Let the Ciel-de-Boeuf look to it. As for King Louis, he will swallow his injuries; will temporize, keep silence; will at all costs have present peace. It was Tuesday, the 26th of June, when he spoke that peremptory royal mandate, and the

* Arthur Young, I, 119.

353. So triumphs the third estate; and states-general are becoming national assembly; and all France may sing Te Deum. By wise inertia, and wise cessation of inertia, great victory has been gained. It is the last night of June; all night you meet nothing on the streets of Versailles but “men running with torches,” with shouts and jubilation. From the 2d of May when they kissed the hand of majesty, to this 30th of June when men run with torches, we count eight weeks and three days. For eight weeks the national carroccio has stood afar-seen, ringing many a signal; and so much having now gathered round it, may hope to stand.

CHAPTER III.

BEOLGIE THE WAR-GOD.

354. The court feels indignant that it is conquered; but what then? Another time it will do better. Mercury descended in vain; now has the time come for Mars. The gods of the Ciel-de-Boeuf have withdrawn into the darkness of their cloudy Ida; and sit there, shaping and forging what may be needful, be it "billets of a new national bank," munitions of war, or things forever inscrutable to men.

355. Accordingly, what means this "apparatus of troops?" The national assembly can get no furtherance for its committee of subsistences; can hear only that at Paris the bakers' shops are besieged; that in the provinces people are "living on meal-husks and boiled grass." But on all highways there hover dust-clouds, with the march of regiments, with the trailing of camions: foreign Pandours, of Aeree aspect; Salis-Samande, Esterhazy, Royal-Allemand; so many of them foreign; to the number of 30,000—which fear can magnify to fifty; all wending toward Paris and Versailles! Already on the heights of Montmartre is a digging and delving, too like a scarping and trenching. The effluence of Paris is arrested Versailles-ward by a barrier of cannon at Sèvres bridge. From the queen's mews cannon stand pointed on the national assembly hall itself. The national assembly has its very slumbers broken by the tramp of soldiery, swarming and delving, endless, or seemingly endless, all round those spaces at dead of night, "without drum-music, without audible word of command."* What means it?

356. Shall eight, or even shall twelve deputies, our Mirabeaus, Barnaves at the head of them, be whirled suddenly to the castle of Ham; the rest ignominiously dispersed to the winds? No national assembly can make the constitution with cannon leveled on it from the queen's mews! What means this reticence of the Ciel-de-Bœuf, broken only by nods and shrugs? In the mystery of that cloudy Ida, what is it that they forge and shape? Such questions must distracted patriotism keep asking and receive no answer but an echo.

357. Questions and echo bad enough in themselves—and now, above all, while the hungry food-year, which runs from August to August, is getting older; becoming more and more a famine-year! With "meal-husks and boiled grass," brigands may actually collect, and in crowds at farm and mansion, howl angrily, Food! Food! It is vain to send soldiers against them: at sight of soldiers they disperse, they vanish as under ground; then directly reassemble elsewhere for new tumult and plunder. Frightful enough to look upon, but what to hear of, reverberated through 25,000,000 of suspicious minds! Brigands and Broglie, open conflagration, preternatural rumor, are driving mad most hearts in France. What will the issue of these things be?

358. At Marseilles, many weeks ago, the townspeople have taken arms for "suppressing of brigands" and other purposes: the military commandant may make of it what he will. Elsewhere, everywhere, could not the like be done? Dubious, on the distracted patriot imagination, wavering, as a last deliverance, some foreshadow of a national guard. But conceive, above all, the wooden tent in the Palais Royal! A universal hubbub there, as of dissolving worlds;
there loudest bellows the mad, mad-making voice of rumor; there sharpest gazes suspicion into the pale, dim world-whirlpool, discerning shapes and phantasms; imminent, bloodthirsty regiments camped on the Champ de Mars; dispersed national assembly; red-hot cannon-balls (to burn Paris); the mad wargod and Bellona's sounding thongs. To the calmest man it is becoming too plain that battle is inevitable. Inevitable, silently not messigneurs and Broglie; inevitable and brief! Your national assembly, stopped short in its constitutional labors, may fatigue the royal ear with addresses and remonstrances, those cannon of ours stand duly leveled; those troops are here. The king's declaration, with its thirty-five too generous articles, was spoken, was not listened to, but remains yet unrevoked: he himself shall effect it, seul il fera!

360. As for Broglie, he has his headquarters at Versailles, all as in a seat of war; clerks writing; significant staff officers, inclined to taciturnity; plumed aids-de-camp, scouts, orderlies flying or hovering. He himself looks forth, important, impene-trable; listens to Besenval, commandant of Paris, and his warning and earnest counsels (for he has come out repeatedly on purpose), with a silent smile.*

The Parisians resist? scornfully cry messigneurs. As a meal-mob may! They have sat quiet, these five generations, submitting to all. Their Mercier declared in these very years that a Parisian revolt was, henceforth, "impossible."† Stand by the royal declaration of the 23d of June. The nobles of France, valorous, chivalrous as of old, will rally round us with one heart; and as for this which you call third estate, and which we call ennui of unwashed sans-culott; of patelin, scribblers, factious spouters—brave Broglie, "with a whiff of grapeshot (salve de canons)," if need be, he will give quick account of it. Thus reason they on their cloudy Ida; hidden from men—men also hidden from them.

361. Good is grapeshot, messigneurs, on one condition: that the shooter also were made of metal! But unfortunately he is made of flesh; under his buff's and bandoleers your hired shooter has instincts, feelings, even a kind of thought. It is his kindred, bone of his bone, this same ennui that shall be whiffed; he has brothers in it, a father and mother—living on meal-husks and boiled grass. His very doxy, not yet "dead i' the spital," drives him into military heterodoxy; declares that if he shed patriot blood he shall be accursed among men. The soldier, who has seen his pay stolen by rapacious Foulons, his blood wasted by Sonnises, Pompadons, and the gates of promotion shut inexorably on him if he were not born noble—is himself not without griefs against you. Your cause is not the soldier's cause, but, as would seem, your own only, and no other god's nor man's.

362. For example, the world may have heard how, at Béthune lately, when there rose some "riot about grains," of which sort there are so many, and the soldiers stood drawn out, and the word "Fire!" was given—not a trigger stirred; only the butts of all muskets rattled angrily against the ground; and the soldiers stood glooming, with a mixed expression of countenance— till clutched "under the arm of a patriot householder," they were all hurried off, in this manner, to be treated and caressed, and have their pay increased by subscription!*

363. Neither have the Gardes Françaises, the best regiment of the line, shown any promptitude for street-firing lately. They returned grumbling from Réveillon's, and have not burnt a single cartridge since; nay, as we saw, not even when bid. A dangerous humor dwells in these gardes. Notable men, too, in their way! Valadi the Pythagorean was at one time an officer of theirs. Nay, in the ranks, under the three-cornered felt and cockade, what hard heads may there not be, and reflections going on—unknown to the public! One head of the hardest we do now discern there: on the shoulders of a certain Sergeant Hoche. Lazare Hoche, that is the name of him; he used to be about the Versailles royal stables, nephew of a poor herbwoman; a handy lad, exceedingly addicted to reading. He is now Sergeant Hoche; and can rise no farther; he lays out his pay in rushlights and cheap editions of books.†

364. On the whole, the best seems to be: Consign these Gardes Françaises to their barracks. So Besenval thinks and orders. Consigned to their barracks, the Gardes Françaises do but form a "secret association," an engagement not to act against the national assembly. Debauched by Valadi the Pythagorean, debauched by money and women! cry Besenval and innumerable others. Debauched by what you will, or in need of no debauching, behold them, long files of them, their consignment broken, arrive, headed by their sergeants, on the 26th day of June, at the Palais Royal! Welcomed with vivats, with presents, and a pledge of patriot liquor, embracing and embraced, declaring in words that the cause of France is their cause! Next day and the following days the like. What is singular, too, except this patriot humor, and breaking of their consignment, they behave otherwise with "the most rigorous accuracy."‡

365. They are growing questionable, these gardes! Eleven ringleaders of them are put in the Abbaye prison. It boots not in the least. The imprisoned eleven have only, "by the hand of an individual," to drop, toward nightfall, a line in the Café de Foy, where patriotism harangues loudest on its table. "Two hundred young persons, soon waxing to four thousand," with fit crowbars, roll toward the Abbaye, smite asunder the needful doors, and bear out their eleven, with other military victims—to supper in the Palais Royal garden, to board, and lodging "in camp-beds" in the Théâtre des Variétés; other national Prytanæan as yet not being in readiness. Most deliberate! Nay, so punctual were these young persons, that finding one military victim to have been imprisoned for real civil crime, they returned him to his cell with protest.

366 Why new military force was not called out? New military force was called out. New military force did arrive, full gallop, with drawn saber; but the people gently "laid hold of their bridles," the dragoons sheathed their swords, lifted their caps by way of salute, and sat like mere statues of dragoons—except, indeed, that a drop of liquor being brought them, they "drank to the king and nation with the greatest cordiality."*

367 And now ask in return why Messeigneurs and Broglie, the great god of war, on seeing these things did not pause and take some other course, any other course. Unhappily, as we said, they could see nothing. Pride, which goes before a fall; wrath, if not reasonable, yet pardonneable, most natural, had hardened their hearts and heated their heads; so, with imbecility and violence (ill-matched pair), they rush to seek their hour. All regiments are not Gardes Françaises, or debauched by Valadi the Pythagorean; let fresh, undebauched regiments come up; let Royal-Allemand, Salis-Samade, Swiss Château-Vieux come up—which can fight, but can hardly speak except in German gutturals—let soldiers march and highways thunder with artiller-y-wagons: majesty has a new royal session to hold—and miracles to work there! The whiff of grapeshot can, if needful, become a blast and tempest!

368 In which circumstances, before the red-hot

* "Histoire Parlementaire," ii. 32

bells begin raining, may not the hundred-and-twenty Paris electors, though their cahier is long since finished, see good to meet again daily, as an "electoral club"? They meet first "in a tavern," where "a large wedding-party" cheerfully gives place to them. But latterly they meet in the Hotel-de-Ville, in the town-hall itself. Flesselles, provost of merchants, with his four echevins (scabin, assessors), could not prevent it; such was the force of public opinion. He, with his echevins and the six-and-twenty town-councilors, all appointed from above, may well sit silent there, in their long gowns, and consider, with awed eye, what prelude this is of convulsion coming from below, and how they themselves shall fare in that!

CHAPTER IV.

TO ARMS.

369 So hangs it, dubious, fateful, in the sultry days of July. It is the passionate printed advice of M. Marat to abstain, of all things, from violence.† Nevertheless the hungry poor are already burning town barriers, where tribute on cattables is levied, getting clamorous for food.

370 The twelfth July morning is Sunday; the streets are all placarded with an enormous-sized Dé par le roi, "inviting peaceable citizens to remain par le roi, "inviting peaceable citizens to remain

within doors," to feel no alarm, to gather in no crowd.

Why so? What means these "placards of enormous size?" Above all, what means this clatter of military; dragoons; hussars, rattling in from all points of the compass toward the Place Louis Quinze, with a staid gravity of face, though saluted with mere nicknames, hootings, and even missiles? Besenval is with them. Swiss guards of his are already in the Champs Elysées, with four pieces of artillery.

371. Have the destroyers descended on us, then? From the bridge of Sèvres to utmost Vicomptes, from Saint-Denis to the Champ-de-Mars, we are begirt! Alarm, of the vague unknown, is in every heart. The Palais Royal has become a place of awe-struck interjections, silent shakings of the head; one can fancy with what dolorous sound the noontide cannon (which the sun fires at crossing of his meridian) went off there—boisterous, like an inarticulate voice of doom. Are these troops verily come out "against brigands? Where are the brigands? What mystery is in the wind? Hark! a human voice reporting articulately the Job's news: Necker, people's minister, nuncio of France, is dismissed! Impossible! Treasonous to the public peace! Such a voice ought to be choked in the water-works; had not the news-bringer quickly fled. Nevertheless, friends make of it what you will, the news is true. Necker is gone. Necker hies northward incessantly, in obedient secrecy, since yester-night. We have a new ministry—Broglie the war-god; aristocrat Breteuil; Foulon, who said the people might eat grass!

372. Rumor, therefore, shall arise in the Palais Royal, and in broad France. Pale ences sits on every face; confused tremor and tremescence, waxing into thunder-peals, of fury stirred on by fear.

373. But see Camille Desmoulins, from the Café de Foy, rushing out, sibylline in face; his hair streaming, in each hand a pistol! He springs to a table; the police satellites are eyeing him; alive they shall not take him, not they alive him alive. This time he speaks without stammering, "Friends! shall we die like hunted hares? Like sheep hounded into their pinfold, bleating for mercy, where is no mercy, but only a whetted knife? The hour is come, the supreme hour of Frenchman and man; when oppressors are to try conclusions with oppressed, and the word is, Swift death or deliverance forever. Let such hour be well-come! Us, meseems, one cry only befits: To arms! Let universal Paris, universal France, as with the throat of the whirlwind, sound only, To arms! "To arms!" yell responsive the innumerable voices, like one great voice, as of a demon yelling from the air; for all faces wax fire-eyed, all hearts burn up into madness. In such, or fitter words, does Camille evoke the elemental powers, in this great moment. Friends, continues Camille, some rallying sign! Cockades, green ones—the color of hope! As with the flight of locusts, these green tree-leaves, green ribbons from the neighboring shops, all green things are snatched and made cockades of. Camille descends from his table, "stifled with embraces, wetted with tears," has a bit of green ribbon handed him, sticks it in his hat. And now to Curtius's image-shop there, to the boulevards, to the four winds, and rest not till France be on fire.

374. France, so long shaken and wind-parched, is probably at the right inflammable point. As for poor Curtius, who, one grieves to think, might be but imperfectly paid—he cannot make two words about his images. The wax bust of Necker, the wax bust of D'Orléans, helpers of France, these, covered with crape, as in funeral procession, or after the manner of suppliants appealing to heaven, to earth, and Tartarus itself, a mixed multitude bears off.

For a sign! As indeed man, with his singular imaginative faculties, can do little or nothing without signs. Thus the Turks look to their prophet's banner, also osier mantles have been burnt, and Necker's portrait has ere while figured aloft on its perch.

375. In this manner march they, a mixed, continually increasing multitude, armed with axes, staves, and miscellanea; grim, many-sounding, through the streets. Be all theaters shut; let all dancing on planked floor, or on the natural greensward, cease! Instead of a Christian Sabbath, and feast of guinguette tabernacles, it shall be a sorcerer's Sabbath, and Paris gone rabid, dance— with the fiend for piper!

376. However, Besenval, with horse and foot, is in the Place Louis Quinze. Mortals promenading home ward in the fall of the day, santer by, from Chaillot or Passy, from flirtation and a little thin wine, with sadder step than usual. Will the bust procession pass that way? Behold it, behold also Prince Lambert dash forth on it, with his Royal-Allemands! Shots fall, and saber-strokes; busts are hewed asunder, and, alas! also heads of men. A sabered procession has nothing for it but to explode, along what streets, alleys, Tuileries avenues it finds, and disappear. One unarmed man lies hewed down, a Garde Francaise by his uniform: bear him (or bear even the report of him) dead and gory to his barracks —where he has comrades still alive!

377. But why not now, victorious Lambert, charge through that Tuileries garden itself, where the fugitives are vanishing? Not show the Sunday promenaders, too, how steel glitters, besprent with blood; that it be told of, and men's ears tingle? Tingle, alas! they did, but the wrong way. Victorious Lambert, in this his second Tuileries charge, succeeds but in overturning (call it not slashing, for he struck with the flat of his sword) one man, a poor old school-master, most pacifically tottering there; and is driven out, by barricade of chairs, by flights of "bottles and glasses," by execrations in bass voice and treble. Most delicate is the mob-queller's vocation, wherein too-much may be as bad as not-enough.
For each of these bass voices, and more each treble voice, borne to all parts of the city, rings now nothing but distracted indignation—will ring all night. The cry, To arms! roars tenfold; steeples with their metal storm-voice boom out, as the sun sinks; armorer's shops are broken open, plundered; the streets are a living foam-sea, chased by all the winds.

378. Such issue came of Lambesc's charge on the Tuileries garden, no striking of salutary terror into Chaillot promenaders; a striking into broad wakefulness of frenzy and the three furies—which other wise were not asleep! For they lie always, those subterranean Eumenides (fabulous and yet so true), in the dullest existence of man—and can dance, brandishing their dusky torches, shaking their serpent-hair. Lambesc with Royal-Allemand may ride to his barracks, with curses for his marching-music, then ride back again, like one troubled in mind; vengeful Gardes Française, sacred, with knit brows start out on him, from their barracks in the Chaussé d'Antin, pour a volley into him (killing and wounding), which he must not answer, but ride on.

379. Counsel dwells not under the plumed hat. If the Eumenides awaken, and Broglie has given no orders, what can a Besenval do? When the Gardes Françaises, with their long gowns have ducked under (into the raging chaos)—shall never emerge more. Besenval is painfully wriggling himself out, to the Champ-de-Mars; he must sit there "in the cruellest uncertainty," courier after courier may dash off for Versailles, but will bring back no answer, can hardly bring himself back. For the roads are all blocked with batteries and pickets, with floods of carriages arrested for examination; such was Broglie's one sole order; the Ceil-de-Beuf, hearing in the distance such mad din, which sounded almost like invasion, will before all things keep its own head whole. A new ministry, with as it were, but one foot in the stirrup, cannot take leaps. Mad Paris is abandoned altogether to itself.

380. Raging multitudes surround the Hotel-de-Ville, crying, Arms! Orders! The six-and-twenty town-councillors, with their long gowns have ducked under (into the raging chaos)—shall never emerge more. Besenval is painfully wriggling himself out, to the Champ-de-Mars; he must sit there "in the cruellest uncertainty," courier after courier may dash off for Versailles, but will bring back no answer, can hardly bring himself back. For the roads are all blocked with batteries and pickets, with floods of carriages arrested for examination; such was Broglie's one sole order; the Ceil-de-Beuf, hearing in the distance such mad din, which sounded almost like invasion, will before all things keep its own head whole. A new ministry, with as it were, but one foot in the stirrup, cannot take leaps. Mad Paris is abandoned altogether to itself.

381. What a Paris when the darkness fell! A European metropolitan city hurled suddenly forth from its old combinations and arrangements, to crash tumultuously together, seeking new. Use and wont will now no longer direct any man; each man, with what of originality he has, must begin thinking, or following those that think. Seven hundred thousand individuals, on the sudden, find all their old paths, old ways of acting and deciding, vanish from under their feet. And so there go they, with clanger and terror—they know not as yet whether running, swimming, or flying—headlong into the new era.
With clanger and terror from above, Broglie the war-god impends, preternatural, with his red-hot cannonballs; and from below a preternatural brigand world menaces with dirk and firebrand; madness rules the hour.
382. Happily, in place of the submerged twenty-six, the electoral club is gathering; has declared itself a “provisional municipality.” On the morrow it will get Provost Flesselles, with an echevin or two, to give help in many things. For the present it decrees one most essential thing, that forthwith a Parisian militia shall be enrolled. Depart, ye heads of districts, to labor in this great work, while we here, in permanent committee, sit alert. Let fenci-hle men, each party in its own range of streets, keep watch and ward all night. Let Paris court a litti® fever-sleep: confused by such fever-dreams; of “violent motions at the Palais Royal;”—or from time to time start awake, and look out, palpitating, in its night-cap, at the clash of discordant mutually-unintelligible patrols, on the gleam of distant barriers, going up all too ruddy toward the vault of night. *

CHAPTER V.

GIVE US ARMS.

383. On Monday the huge city has awoken, not to its week-day industry, to what a different one? The working man has become a fighting man; has one want only, that of arms. The industry of all crafts has paused—except it be the smith’s, fiercely hammering pikes; and, in a faint degree, the kitchener’s cooking off-hand victuals; for bouche va toujours. Women, too, are sewing cockades—not now of green, which being D’Artois color, the Hotel-de-Ville has had to interfere in it; but of red and blue, our old Paris colors; these, once based on a ground of constitutional white, are the famed tricolor—which (if prophecy err not) “will go round the world.”

384. All shops, unless it be the bakers’ and vinters’, are shut. Paris is in the streets—rushing, foaming like some Venice wine-glass into which you had dropped poison. The tocsin, by order, is pealing madly from all steeples. Arms, ye elector municipals; thou Flesselles with thy echevins, give us arms! Flesselles gives what he can; falacious, perhaps insidious promises of arms from Charleville;
order to seek arms here, order to seek them there.
The new municipals give what they can: some three-hundred and sixty indifferent firelocks, the equipment of the city-watch. “A man in wooden shoes and without coat, directly clutches one of them, and mounts guard.” Also, as hinted, an order to all smiths to make pikes with their whole soul.

385. Heads of districts are in fervent consultation, subordinate patriotism roams distracted, ravenous for arms. Hitherto at the Hôtel-de-Ville was only such modicum of indifferent firelocks as we have seen. At the so-called arsenal, there lies nothing but rust, rubbish, and saltpetre— overlooked, too, by the guns of the Bastille. His majesty's repository, what they call garde meuble, is forced and ransacked; tapestries enough, and gauderies; but of serviceable fighting-gear small stock! Two silver-mounted camions there are, an ancient gift from his majesty of Siam to Louis Fourteenth: gilt sword of the Good Henri; antique chivalry arms and armor. These and such as these, a necessitous patriotism snatches greedily, for want of better. The Siamese cannons go trundling on an errand they were not meant for. Among the indifferent firelocks are seen tourney-lances; the princely helm and hauberk glittering amid ill-hatted heads—as in a time when all times and their possessions are suddenly sent jumbling! 386. At the Maison de Saint Lazare, lazar-house once, now a correction house with priests, there was no trace of arms; but, on the other hand, corn plainly to a culpable extent. Out with it, to market, in this scarcity of grains! Heavens, will "fifty-two carts," in long row, hardly carry it to the halle aux bleds? Well, truly, ye reverend fathers, was your pantry filled; fat are your larders, overgenerous your wine-bins, ye plotting exasperators of the poor, traitorous forestallers of bread?

387. Vain is protesting, entreaty on bare knees, the house of Saint-Lazarus has that in it which comes not out by protesting. Behold, how, from every window, it vomits mere torrents of furniture, of bellowing and hurly-burly—the cellars also leaking wine. Till, as was natural, smoke rose, kindled, some say, by the desperate Saint-Lazaristes themselves, desperate of other riddance; and the establishment vanished from this world in flame. Remark nevertheless that "a thief" (set on or not by aristocrats), being detected there, is "instantly hanged."

388. Look also at the Châtelet prison. The debtors' prison of La Force is broken from without; and they that sat in bondage to aristocrats go free; hearing of which the felons at the Châtelet do likewise "dig up their pavements," and stand on the offensive, with the best prospects—had not patriotism, passing that way, "fired a volley" into the felon world; and crushed it down again under hatches. Patriotism consorts not with thieving and felony; surely also punishment, this day, hinges (if she still hitches), after crime, with frightful shoes-of-swiftness! "Some score or two" of wretched persons, found prostrate with drink in the cellars of that Saint-Lazarus, are indignantly haled to prison; the jailor has no room; whereupon, other place of security not suggesting itself, it is written, "on les pendit, (they hanged them)." Brief is the word, not without significance, be it true or untrue!

389. In such circumstances, the aristocrat, the unpatriotic rich man, is packing-up for departure. But he shall not get departed. A wooden-shod force has seized all barriers, burnt or not; all that enters, all that seeks to issue, is stopped there and dragged to the Hotel-de-Ville; coaches, truncheons, plate, furniture, "many meal-sacks," in time even "flocks and herds," encumber the Place de Grève.*

390. And so it roars, and rages, and brays: drums beating, steeples pealing, criers rushing with hand-bells: "Oyez, oyez. All men to their districts to be enrolled!" The districts have met in gardens, open squares, are getting marshaled into volunteer troops. No red-hot ball has yet fallen from Besenval's camp; on the contrary, deserters with their arms are continually dropping in, nay, now, joy of joys, at two in the afternoon, the Garde Française, being ordered to Saint-Denis, and flatly declining, have come over in a body! It is a fact worth many. Three thousand six hundred of the best fighting men, with complete accoutrement; with cannoneers even, and cannon. Their officers are left standing alone—could not so much as succeed in "spiking the guns." The very Swiss, it may now be hoped, Château-Vieux and the others, will have doubts about fighting.

391. Our Parisian militia—which some think it were better to name national guard—is prospering as heart could wish. It promised to be 48,000, but will in few hours double and quadruple that number, invincible if we had only arms! But see the promised Charleville boxes, marked artillery! Here, then, are arms enough? Conceive the blank face of patriotism when it found them filled with rags, foul linen, candle-ends, and bits of wood. Provost of the merchants, how is this? Neither at the Chartreux convent, whither we were sent with signed order, is there or ever was there any weapon of war. Nay, here in this Seine boat, safe under tarpaulins (had not the nose of patriotism been of the finest), are "five thousand-weight of gunpowder," not coming in, but surreptitiously going out! What meanest thou, Flesselles? 'Tis a ticklish game, that of "amusing" us. Cat plays with captive mouse; but mouse, with enraged cat, with enraged national tiger?

392. Meanwhile, the faster, O ye black-aproned smiths, smith, with strong arm and willing heart. This man and that, all stroke from head to heel, shall thunder alternating, and ply the great forge-hammer, till stilly reel and ring again, while ever and anon, overhead booms the alarm cannon—for the city has now got gunpowder. Pikes are fabricated, fifty thousand of them, in six-and-thirty hours; judge whether the black-aproned have been idle. Dig trenches, unpave the streets, ye others, assiduous, man and maid; cram the earth in barrel-barricades, at each of them a volunteer sentry; pile the whinstones in window sills and upper rooms. Have scalding pitch, at least boiling water, ready, ye weak old women, to pour it and dash it on Royal-Allemand, with your old skinny arms; your shrill curses along with it will not be wanting. Patrols of the newborn national guard, bearing torches, scour the streets all that night, which otherwise are vacant, yet illuminated in every window by order. Strange looking, like some naptha-lighted city of the dead, with here and there a flight of perturbed ghosts.

O poor mortals, how ye make this earth bitter for each other; this fearful and wonderful life fearful and horrible, and Satan has his place in all hearts! Such agonies and ragings and wailing ye have, and have had, in all times—to be hurled all in so deep silence; and the salt sea is not swollen with your tears.

394. Great, meanwhile, is the moment when tidings of freedom reach us; when the long-inthralled soul, from amid its chains and squalid stagnancy, arises, were it still only in blindness and bewilderment, and swears by Him that made it that it will be free. Free? Understand that well; it is the deep commandment, dimmer or clearer, of our whole being to be free. Freedom is the one purport, wisely aimed at, or unwisely, of all man's struggles, toilings and sufferings in this earth. Yes, supreme is such a moment (if thou have known it), first vision as of a flame-girt Sinai, in this our waste pilgrimage—which thenceforth wants not its pillar of cloud by day and pillar of fire by night. Something it is even—nay, something considerable, when the chains have grown corrosive, poisonous—to be free "from oppression by our fellow-man." Forward, ye maddened sons of France; be it toward this destiny or toward that! Around you is but starvation, falsehood, corruption and the clam of death. Where ye are is no abiding.

395. Imagination may, imperfectly, figure how Commandant Besenval, in the Champ-de-Mars, has worn out these sorrowful hours. Insurrection raging all round, his men melting away! From Versailles, to the most pressing messages, comes no answer, or once only some vague word of answer which is worse than none. A council of officers can decide merely that there is no decision; colonels inform him, "weeping," that they do not think their men will fight. Cruel uncertainty is here, war-god Broglie sits yonder, inaccessible in his Olympus; does not descend terror-clad, does not produce his whiff of grape-shot, sends no orders.

396. Truly, in the Chateau of Yersailles all seems mystery; in the town of Versailles, were we there, all is rumor, alarm, and indignation. An august national assembly sits, to appearance, menaced with death, endeavoring to defy death. It has resolved "that Necker carries with him the regrets of the nation." It has sent solemn deputation over to the chateau, with entreaty to have these troops withdrawn. In vain; his majesty, with a singular composure, invites us to be busy rather with our own duty, making the constitution. Foreign pandours, and such-like, go pricking and prancing, with a swashbuckler air, with an eye, too, probably to the Salle des Menus—were it not for the "grim-looking countenances" that crowd all avenues there.* Be

397. The august national senators determine that there shall, at least, be permanent session till this thing end. Wherein, however, consider that worthy Lafranç de Pompignan, our new president, whom we have named Bailly's successor, is an old man, wearied with many things. He is the brother of that Pompignan who meditated lamentably on the book of Lamentations:

_Savez-vous pourquoi Jérémie
Se lamentait toute sa vie?
C'est qu'il prévoyait
Que Pompignan le traduirait_

Poor Bishop Pompignan withdraws, having got Lafayette for helper or substitute; this latter, as nocturnal vice-president, with a thin house in disconsolate humor, sits sleepless, with lights unsnuffed, waiting, what the hours will bring.

398. So at Versailles. But at Paris, agitated Besenval, before retiring for the night, has stepped over to old M. de Sombreuil, of the Hotel des Invalides hard by. M. de Sombreuil has, what is a great secret, some eight-and-twenty thousand stand of muskets deposited in his cellars there, but no trust in the temper of his invalides. This day, for example, he sent twenty of the fellows down to unscrew those muskets, lest sedition might snatch at them; but scarcely, in six hours, had the twenty unscrewed twenty gun-locks, or dog-heads (chiens) of locks, each invalid's his dog's-head! If ordered to fire, they would, he imagines, turn their cannon against himself.

399. Unfortunate old military gentlemen, it is your hour, not of glory! Old Marquis de Launay, too, of the Bastille, has pulled up his drawbridges long since, "and retired into his interior," with sentries walking on his battlements, under the midnight sky, aloft over the glare of illuminated Paris—whom a national patrol, passing that way, takes the liberty of firing at, "seven shots toward twelve at night," which do not take effect.* This was the 13th day of July, 1789, a worse day, many said, than the last 13th was, when only hail fell out of heaven, not madness rose out of Tophet, ruining worse than crops!

400. In these same days, as chronology will teach us, hot old Marquis Mirabeau lies stricken down at Argenteuil—not within sound of these alarm-guns; or he properly is not there, and only the body of him now lies, deaf and cold forever. It was on Saturday night that he, drawing his last life-breaths, gave up the ghost there—leaving a world which would never go to his mind, now broken out, seemingly, into deliration and the culbute générale. What is it to him, departing elsewhere, on his long journey? The old Château Mirabeau stands silent, far off, on its scarped rock, in that "gorge of two windy valleys," the pale-fading specter now of château; this huge world-riot, and France, and the world itself, fades also, like a shadow on the great still mirror-sea; and all shall be as God wills.

* "Deux Amis de la Liberté," i. 312.
401. Young Mirabeau, sad of heart, for he loved this crabbed, brave old father—sad of heart, and occupied with sad cares is withdrawn from public history. The great crisis transacts itself without him.

CHAPTER VI.

STORM AND VICTORY.

402. But, to the living and the struggling, a new fourteenth morning dawns. Under all roofs of this distracted city is the nodus of a drama, not untragi-cal, crowding toward solution. The busings and preparations, the tremors and menaces, the tears that fell from old eyes! This day, my sons, ye shall quit you like men. By the memory of your fathers wrongs; by the hope of your children's rights! Tyranny impends in red wrath: help for you is none, if not in your own right hands. This day ye must do or die.

403. From earliest light, a sleepless permanent committee has heard the old cry, now waxing almost frantic, mutinous, Arms! Arms! Provost Flesselles, or what traitors there are among you, may think of those Charleville boxes. A hundred and fifty thousand of us, and but the third man furnished with so much as a pike! Arms are the one thing needful; with arms we are an unconquerable man-defying national guard; without arms, a rabble to be whiffed with grape-shot.

404. Happily the word has arisen, for no secret can be kept, that there lie muskets at the Hotel des Invalides. Thither will we, King's Procureur M. Ethys de Corny, and whatsoever of authority a permanent committee can lend, shall go with us. Besenval's camp is there; perhaps he will not fire on us; if he kill us, we shall but die.

405. Alas! poor Besenval, with his troops melting away in that manner, has not the smallest humor to fire! At five o'clock this morning, as he lay dreaming, oblivious in the Ecole Militaire, a "figure" stood suddenly at his bedside; "with face rather handsome, eyes inflamed, speech rapid and curt, air audacious:" such a figure drew Priam's curtains! The message and monition of the figure was that resistance would be hopeless; that if blood flowed, woe to him who shed it. Thus spoke the figure, and vanished: "Withal there was a kind of eloquence that struck one." Besenval admits that he should have arrested him, but did not. Who this figure with inflamed eyes, with speech rapid and curt, might be, Besenval knows, but mentions not. Camille Desmoulins? Pythagorean Marquis Valadi, inflamed with "violent motions all night at the Palais Royal?" Fame names him "Young M. Meillar;" then shuts her lips about him forever.

406. In any case, behold, about nine in the moru-ing, our national volunteers rolling in long wide flood south-westward to the Hotel des Invalides, in search of the one thing needful. King’s Procureur M.

Ethys de Corny and officials are there; the curé of Saint-Etienne du Mont marches unpacific at the head of his militant parish; the clerks of the basoche in red coats we see marching, now volunteers of the basoche, the volunteers of the Palais Royal, na tional volunteers, numerable by tens of thousands, of one heart and mind. The king’s muskets are the nation’s; think, old M. de Sombreuil, how, in this extremity, thou wilt refuse them! Old M. de Sombreuil would fain hold parley, send couriers, but it skills not; the walls are scaled, no invalide firing a shot; the gates must be flung open.
Patriotism rushes in tumultuous, from grunsel up to ridge-tile, through all rooms and passages, rummaging distractedly for arms. What cellar or what cranny can escape it? The arms are found, all safe there, lying packed in straw, apparently with a view to being burnt! More ravenous than famishing lions over dead prey, the multitude, with changor vociferation, pounces on them, struggling, dashing, clutching, to the jamming up, to the pressure, fracture, and probable extinction of the weaker patriot.8
And so, with such protracted crash of deafening, most-discordant orchestra-music, the scene is changed;
and eight-and-twenty thousand sufficient fire-locks
are on the shoulders of as many national guards, lifted thereby out of darkness into fiery light.

* "Deux Amis," i. 302.

407. Let Besenval look at the glitter of these mus­kets as they flash by! Gardes Françaises, it is said, have cannon leveled on him, ready to open, if need were, from the other side of the river.* Motionless sits he; "astonished," one may flatter one’s self, "at the proud bearing (fière contenance) of the Parisians."
And now to the Bastille, ye intrepid Parisians!
There grape-shot still threatens: thither all men’s thoughts and steps are now tending.

408. Old De Launay, as we hinted, withdrew in­to his interior” soon after midnight of Sunday. He remains there ever since, hampered, as all military gentlemen now are, in the saddest conflict of uncertainties. The Hotel-de-Ville “invites” him to ad­mit national soldiers, which is a soft name for sur­rendering. On the other hand his majesty’s orders were precise. His garrison is but eighty-two old invalides, reinforced by thirty-two young Swiss; his walls, indeed, are nine feet thick; he has cannon and powder, but, alas! only one day’s provision of vic­tuals. The city, too, is French, the poor garrison mostly French. Rigorous old De Launay, think what thou wilt do!

409. All morning, since nine, there has been a cry everywhere, To the Bastille! Repeated “deputa­tions of citizens” have been here, passionate for arms, whom De Launay has got dismissed by soft speeches through port-holes. Toward noon, Elector Thuriot de la Rosière gains admittance, finds De Launay indisposed for surrender, Nay, disposed for blowing up the place rather. Thuriot mounts with him to the battlements; heaps of paving-stones, old iron, and missiles lie piled; cannon all duly leveled; in every embrasure a cannon—only drawn back a little! But outwards, behold, O Thuriot, how the multitude flows on, welling through every street; tocsin furiously pealing, all drums beating the general; the suburb Saint-Antoine rolling hitherward wholly, as one man! Such vision (spectral, yet real) then, O Thuriot, as from thy mount of visions, beholdest in this moment, prophetic of what other phantasmagories and loud-gibbering spectral realities which thou yet beholdest not, but shalt! "Que voulez-vous?" said De Launay, turning pale at the sight, with an air of reproach, almost of menace. "Monsieur," said Thuriot, rising into the moral sublime, "what mean you? Consider if I could not precipitate all of us from this height," say only a hundred feet, exclusive of the walled ditch! Whereupon De Launay fell silent. Thuriot shows himself from some pinnacle, to comfort the multitude becoming suspicious, then descends, departs with protests, with warning addressed also to the invalides, on whom, however, it produces but a mixed, indistinct impression. The old heads are none of the clearest; besides, it is said, De Launay has been profuse of beverages (prodigue des buissons). They think they will not fire—if not fired on—if they can help it; but must, on the whole, be ruled considerably by circumstances!

410. Woe to thee, De Launay, in such an hour, if thou canst not, taking some one firm decision, rule circumstances! Soft speeches will not serve, hard grape-shot is questionable, but hovering between the two is unquestionable. Ever wilder swells the tide of men, their infinite hum waxing ever louder, into imprecactions, perhaps into crackle of stray musketry—which latter, on walls nine feet thick, cannot do execution. The outer drawbridge has been lowered for Thuriot; new deputation of citizens (it is the third and noisiest of all) penetrates that way into the outer court; soft speeches producing no clearance of these, De Launay gives fire, pulls up his drawbridge. A slight sputter, which has kindled the too combustible chaos, made it a rearing fire-chaos! Bursts forth insurrection, at sight of its own blood (for there were deaths by that sputter of fire), into endless rolling explosion of musketry, distraction, execration, and over head, from the fortress, let one great gun, with its grape-shot, go booming, to show what we could do. The Bastille is besieged!

411. On, then, all Frenchmen that have hearts in your bodies! Roar with all your throats of Cartilage and metal, ye sons of liberty; stir spasmodically whatsoever of utmost faculty is in you, soul, body, or spirit, for it is the hour! Smile thou, Louis Tournay, cartwright of the Marais, old soldier of the Regiment Dauphiné—smile at that outer drawbridge chain, though the fiery hail whistles round thee! Never, over nave or felloe, did thy axe strike such a stroke. Down with it, man; down with it to Orcus; let the whole accursed edifice sink thither, and tyranny be swallowed up forever! Mounted, some say, on the roof of the guard-room, some "on bay­onets stuck into joints of the wall," Louis Tournay smites, brave Ainhin Bonnemère (also an old soldier) seconding him. The chain yields, breaks; the huge drawbridge slams down, thundering (avac fracas). Glorious! and yet, alas! it is still but the outworks. The eight grim towers, with their invalid musketry, their paving-stones and cannon-mouths, still soar aloft intact; ditch yawning impassable, stone-faced; the inner drawbridge with its back toward us; the Bastille is still to take!

412. To describe this siege of the Bastille (thought to be one of the most important in history) perhaps transcends the talent of mortals. Could one but, after infinite reading, get to understand so much as the plan of the building! But there is open esplanade at the end of the Rue Saint-Antoine; there are such forecourts, (cour avancé), cour de l'orme, arched gateway (where Louis Tournay now figlits); then new drawbridges, dormant-bridges, rampart-bastions, and the grim eight towers, a labyrinthic mass, high-frowning there, of all ages from twenty years to four hundred and twenty, beleaguered in this its last hour, as we said, by mere chaos come again! Ordnanee of all calibers, throats of all capacities, men of all plans, every man his own engineer; seldom since the war of pygmies and cranes was there seen so anomalous a thing. Half-pay Elie is homs for a suit of regimentals, no one would heed him in colored clothes; half-pay Hulin is haranguing Gardes Françaises in the Place de Grève. Frantic patriots pick up the grape-shots, bear them, still hot (or seemingly so), to the Hotel-de-Ville. Paris, you perceive, is to be burnt! Flesselles is "pale to the very lips," for the roar of the multitude grows deep. Paris, wholly, has got to the acme of its frenzy, whirled all ways by panic madness. At every street-barricade there whirls, simmering, a minor whirlpool, strengthening the barricade, since God knows what is coming; and all minor whirlpools play distractedly into that grand fire-maelstrom which is lashing round the Bastille.

413. And so it lashes and it roars. Cholat, the wine-merchant, has become an impromptu cannoneer. See Georget, of the marine service, fresh from Brest, ply the King of Siam's cannon. Singular (if we were not used to the like). Georget lay, last night, taking his case at his inn; the King of Siam's cannon also lay, knowing nothing of him for a hundred years; yet now, at the right instant, they have got together, and discourse eloquent music; for, hearing what was toward, Georget sprang from the Brest diligence, and ran. Gardes Françaises, also, will be here, with real artillery. Were not the walls so thick! Upward from the esplanade, horizontally from all neighboring roofs and windows, flashes one irregular deluge of musketry, without effect. The invalides lie flat, firing comparatively at their ease from behind stone; hardly through port-holes show the tip of a nose. We fall, shot, and make no impression!

414. Let conflagration rage of whatsoever is combustible! Guard-rooms are burnt, invalides mess-rooms. A distracted "peruke-maker with two fiery torches" is for burning "the saltpeters of the arsenal," had not a woman run screaming, had not a patriot, with some tincture of natural philosophy, instantly struck the wind out of him (butt of musket on pit of stomach), overturned barrels, and stayed the devouring element. A young beautiful lady, seized, escaping, in these outer courts, and thought, falsely, to be De Launay's daughter, shall be burnt in De Launay's sight: she lies, swooned, on a paillasse; but, again, a patriot—it is brave Aubin Bonnemère, the old soldier—dashes in, and rescues her. Straw is burnt; three cartloads of it, hauled hither, go up in white smoke, almost to the choking of patriotism itself; so that Elie had, with singed brows, to drag back one cart, and Réole, the "gigantic haberdasher," another. Smoke as of Tophet, confusion as of Babel, noise as of the crack of doom!

415. Blood flows, the aliment of new madness. The wounded are carried into houses of the Rue Cerisaie; the dying leave their last mandate not to yield till the accursed stronghold fall. And yet, alas! how fall? The walls are so thick! Deputations, three in number, arrive from the Hotel-de-Ville, Abbe Fauchet (who was of one) can say with what almost superhuman courage of benevolence.* These wave their town-flag in the arched gateway, and stand, rolling their drum, but to no purpose. In such crack of doom, De Launay cannot hear them; dare not believe them; they return, with justified rage, the whew of lead still singing in their ears. What to do? The firemen are here, squirting with their fire-pumps on the Invalides cannon, to wet the touch-holes; they unfortunately cannot squirt so high, but produce only clouds of spray. Individuals of classical knowledge propose catapults. Santerre, the sonorous brewer of the suburb Saint-Antoine, advises rather that the place be fired by a "mixture of phosphorous and oil of turpentine spouted up through forcing-pumps." O Spinola-Santerre, hast thou the mixture ready? Every man his own engineer! And still the fire-deluge abates not; even women are firing, and Turks—at least one woman (with her sweetheart), and one Turk. Gardes Françaises have come; real cannon, real cannoneers. Usher Maillard is busy; half-pay Elie, half-pay Hulin, rage in the midst of thousands.

416. How the great Bastille clock ticks (inaudible) in its inner court; there, at its base, hour after hour; as if nothing special, for it or the world, were passing! It tolled one when the firing began, and is now pointing toward five, and still the firing slack not. Far down, in their vaults, the seven prisoners hear muffled din as of earthquakes; their turnkeys answer vaguely.

417. Woe to thee, De Launay, with thy poor hundred invalides! Broglie is distant, and his ears heavy; Besenval hears, but can send no help. One poor troop of hussars has crept, reconnoitering, cautiously along the quais, as far as Pont Neuf. "We are come to join you," said the captain, for the crowd seems shortless. A large-headed dwarfish individual, of smoke-blearred aspect, shambles forward, opening his blue lips, for there is sense in him, and croaks, "Alight then, and give up your arms!" The hussar-captain is too happy to be escorted to the barriers and dismissed on parole. Who the squat individual was? Men answer It is M. Marat, author of the excellent pacific

"Avis au Peuple!" Great, truly, O thou remarkable dog-leech, is this thy day of emergence and new-birth; and yet this same day come four years—but let the curtains of the future hang.

418. What shall De Launay do? One thing only De Launay could have done—what he said he would do. Fancy him sitting, from the first, with lighted taper, within arm's-length of the powder-magazine;
motionless, like old Roman senator, or bronze lamp-holder; coldly apprising Thuriot, and all men, by a slight motion of his eye, what his resolution was.
Harmless he sat there, while unharmed; but the king's fortress, meanwhile, could, might, would or should in nowise be surrendered save to the king's messenger; one old man's life is worthless, so it be lost with honor; but think, ye brawling canaille, how will it be when a whole Bastille springs sky-ward? In such statuesque, taper-holding attitude, one fancies De Launay might have left Thuriot, the red clerks of the bassehe, curé of Saint-Stephen, and all the tag-rag and bobtail of the world, to work their will.

419. And yet, withal, he could not do it. Hast thou considered how each man's heart is so tremuously responsive to the hearts of all men? hast thou noted how omnipotent is the very sound of many men? How their shriek of indignation palstes the strong soul? their howl of contumely withers with unfelt pangs? The Ritter Gluck confessed that the ground-tone of the noblest passage in one of his noblest operas was the voice of the populace he had heard at Vienna, crying to their kaiser, Bread! Bread!
Great is the combined voice of men, the utterance of their instinct, which are truer than their thoughts;
it is the greatest a man encounters, among the sounds and shadows which make up this world of time.
He who can resist that, has his footing somewhere beyond time. De Launay could not do it. Distracted, he hovers between two—hopes in the middle of despair; surrenders not his fortress; declares that he will blow it up, seizes torches to blow it up, and does not blow it. Unhappy old De Launay, it is the death-agony of thy Bastille and thee! Jail, jailoring, and jailor, all three, such as they may have been,
must finish.

420. For four hours now has the world-bedlam roared; call it the world-chimera, blowing fire! The poor invalides have sunk under their battlements, or rise only with reversed muskets; they have made a white flag of napkins, go beating the chamade, or seem to beat, for one can hear nothing. The very Swiss at the portcullis look weary of firing, disheartened in the fire-deluge; a port-hole at the drawbridge is opened, as by one that would speak. See Huissier Maillard, the shifty man! On his plank, swinging over the abyss of that stone ditch, plank resting on parapet, balanced by weight of patriots, he hovers perilous—such a dove toward such an ark! Defly, thou shifty usher; one man already fell, and lies smashed, far down there, against the masonry! Usher Maillard fails not; dexterously, unerring, he walks, with outspread palm. The Swiss holds a paper through his port-hole; the shifty usher snatches it and returns. Terms of surrender, Pardon, immunity to all! Are they accepted? “Foi d’officier (On the word of an officer),” answers half-pay Hulin, or half-pay Elie—for men do not agree on it—“they are!” Sinks the drawbridge, Usher Maillard bolting it when down; rushes—in the living deluge; the Bastille is fallen! Victoire! La Bastille est prise!"

CHAPTER VII

NOT A REVOLT.

421. Why dwell on what follows? Hulin’s foi d’officier should have been kept, but could not. The Swiss stand drawn up, disguised in white canvas smocks; the invalides without disguise, their arms all piled against the wall. The first rush of victors, in ecstasy that the death-peril is passed, “leaps joyfully on their necks;” but new victors rush, and returns. Terms of surrender, Pardon, immunity to all—are they accepted? “Foi d’officier (On the word of an officer),” answer shall half-pay Hulin, or half-pay Elie—for men do not agree on it—“they are!” Sinks the drawbridge, Usher Maillard bolting it when down; rushes—in the living deluge; the Bastille is fallen! Victoire! La Bastille est prise!"

ever new, also in ecstasy not wholly of joy. As we said, it was a living deluge, plunging headlong; had not the Gardes Françaises, in their cool military way, “wheel’d round with arms leveled,” it would have plunged suicidally, by the hundred or the thousand, into the Bastille-ditch.

422. And so it goes plunging through court and corridor; billowing uncontrollable, firing from windows—on itself; in hot frenzy of triumph, of grief; and vengeance for its slain. The poor invalides will fare ill; one Swiss, running off in his white smock, is driven back, with a death-thrust. Let all prisoners be marched to the town-hall to be judged! Alas, already one poor invalid has his right hand slashed off him, his maimed body dragged to the Place de Grève, and hanged there. This same right hand, it is said, turned back De Launay from the powder-magazine, and saved Paris.

423. De Launay, “discovered in gray frock with poppy-colored ribbon,” is for killing himself with the sword of his cane. He shall to the Hotel-de-Ville, Hulin, Maillard, and others escorting him, Elie marching foremost, “with the capitulation-paper on his sword’s point.” Through roarings and cursings, through hustlings, clenchings, and at last through strokes! Your escort is hustled aside, fell down; Hulin sinks exhausted on a heap of stones. Misera­ble De Launay! He shall never enter the Hotel-de-Ville; only his “bloody hair-queue, held up in a bloody hand,” that shall enter, for a sign. The bleeding trunk lies on the steps there; the head is off through the streets, ghastly, aloft on a pike.
424. Rigorous De Launay has died, crying out, "O friends, kill me fast!" Merciful De Losme must die; though gratitude embraces him, in this fearful hour, and will die for him, it avails not. Brothers, your wrath is cruel! Your Place de Grève is become a throat of the tiger, full of mere fierce bellowings, and thirst of blood. One other officer is massacred; one other invalide is hanged on the lamp-iron; with difficulty, with generous perseverance, the Gardes Françaises will save the rest. Provost Flesselles, stricken long since with the paleness of death, must descend from his seat, "to be judged at the Palais Royal;"— alas, to be shot dead by an unknown hand at the turning of the first street!

425. O evening sun of July, how, at this hour, thy beams fall saintly on reapers amid peaceful woody fields, on old women spinning in cottages, on ships far out in the silent main; on balls of the orangerie of Versailles, where high-rouged dames of the palace are even now dancing with double-jacketed hussar-officers; and also on this roaring hell-porch of a Hotel-de-Ville! Babel tower, with the confusion of tongues, was not bedlam added with the conflagration of thoughts, was no new type of it. One forest of distracted steel bristles, endless, in front of an electoral committee; points itself, in horrid radii, against this and the other accused breast. It was the Titans warring with Olympus; and they, scarcely crediting it, have conquered; prodigy of prodigies; delirium—as it could not but be. Damnation, vengeance, blaze of triumph on a dark ground of terror; all outward, all inward things fallen into one general wreck of madness!

426. Electoral committee? Had it a thousand throats of brass, it would not suffice. Abbé Lefèvre, in the vaults down below, is black as Vulcan, distributing that "five thousand-weight of powder," with what perils, these eight-and-forty hours! Last night, a patriot, in liquor, insisted on sitting to smoke on the edge of one of the powder-barrels; there smoked he, independent of the world—till the Abbé "purchased his pipe for three francs," and pitched it far.

427. Elie, in the grand hall, electoral committee looking on, sits "with drawn sword bent in three places;" with battered helm, for he was of the Queen's Regiment, cavalry; with torn regimentals, face singed and soiled; comparable, some think, to "an antique warrior"—judging the people, forming a list of Bastille heroes. O friends, stain not with blood the greenest laurels ever gained in this world, such is the burden of Elie's song, could it but be listened to. Courage, Elie! Courage, ye municipal electors! A declining sun, the need of victuals and of telling news, will bring assuagement, dispersion—all earthly things must end.

428. Along the streets of Paris circulate seven Bastille prisoners, borne shoulder-high, seven heads on pikes, the keys of the Bastille, and much else. See, also, the Gardes Françaises, in their steadfast military way, marching home to their barracks, with the invalides and Swiss kindly inclosed in hollow square.
It is one year and two months since these same men stood unparticipating, with Brennus d'Agoust at the Palais de Justice, when fate overtook D'Espreménil; and now they have participated, and will participate. Not Garde Française henceforth, but Center Grenadiers of the National Guard—men of iron discipline and humor, not without a kind of thought in them!

Likewise, aslhar stones of the Bastille continue thundering through the dusk; its paper archives shall fly white. Old secrets come to view, and long-buried despair finds voice. Read this portion of an old letter: "If for my consolation monsieur would grant me, for the sake of God and the most blessed Trinity, that I could have news of my dear wife, were it only her name on a card, to show that she is alive! It were the greatest consolation I could receive, and I should forever bless the greatness of monsieur." Poor prisoner, who namest thyself Quéret-Démery, and has no other history—she is dead, that dear wife of thine, and thou art dead! 'Tis fifty years since thy breaking heart put this question, to be heard now first, and long heard, in the hearts of men.

But so does the July twilight thicken; so must Paris, as sick children and all distracted creatures do, brawl itself finally into a kind of sleep. Municipal electors, astonished to find their heads still uppermost, are home; only Moreau de Saint-Méry, of tropical birth and heart, of coolest judgment, he, with two others, shall sit permanent at the townhall. Paris sleeps; gleams upward the illuminated city; patrols go clashing, without common watchword; there go rumors, alarms of war, to the extent of "15,000 men marching through the suburb Saint-Antoine"—who never got it marched through. Of the day's distraction judge by this of the night—Moreau de Saint-Méry, "before rising from his seat, gave upward of 3,000 orders." What a head, comparable to Friar Bacon's brass head! Within it lies all Paris. Prompt must the answer be, right or wrong; in Paris is no other authority extant. Seriously, a most cool, clear head—for which also thou, O brave Saint-Méry, in many capacities, from august senator to merchant's clerk, book dealer, vice-king in many places, from Virginia to Sardinia, shalt, ever as a brave man, find employment.

Besenval has decamped under cloud of dusk, "amid a great affluence of people," who did not harm him; he marches with faint-growing tread, down the left bank of the Seine, all night—toward infinite space. Re-summoned shall Besenval himself be, for trial, for difficult acquittal. His king-troops, his Royal-Allemand, are gone hence forever.

The Versailles ball and lemonade is done; the orangerie is silent except for night-birds. Over in the Salle des Menus Vice-President Lafayette, with unsufficed lights, "with some hundred or so of members stretched on tables round him," sits erect, out-watching the bear. This day a second solemn deputation went to his majesty, a second, and then a third—with no effect. What will the end of these things be?

433. In the court all is mystery, not without whisperings of terror, though ye dream of lemonade and epaulettes, ye foolish women! His majesty, kept in happy ignorance, perhaps dreams of double-barrels and the woods of Meudon. Late at night, the Duke de Liancourt, having official right of entrance, gains access to the royal apartments, unfolds, with earnest clearness, in his constitutional way, the Job's news. "Mais," said poor Louis, "c'est une révolte (Why, that is a revolt)!" "Sire," answered Liancourt, "it is not a revolt—it is a revolution."

CHAPTER VIII.

CONQUERING YOUR KING.

434. On the morrow a fourth deputation to the château is on foot, of a more solemn, not to say awful character; for, besides "orgies in the orangery," it seems "the grain-convoys are all stopped," nor has Mirabeau's thunder been silent. Such deputation is on the point of setting out—when lo, his majesty himself, attended only by his two brothers, steps in, quite in the paternal manner, announces that the troops, and all causes of offense, are gone; and henceforth there shall be nothing but trust, reconciliation, good-will; whereas he "permits, and even requests," a national assembly to assure Paris in his name! Acclamation, as of men suddenly delivered from death, gives answer. The whole assembly spontaneously rises to escort his majesty back, "interlacing their arms to keep off the excessive pressure from him," for all Versailles is crowding and shouting. The château musicians, with a felicitous promptitude, strike up the Sein de sa Famille (Bosom of One's Family); the queen appears at the balcony with her little boy and girl, "kissing them several times," infinite vivats spread far and wide—and suddenly there has come, as it were, a new heaven-on-earth.

435. Eighty-eight august senators, Bailly, Lafayette, and our repentant archbishop among them, take coach for Paris, with the great intelligence; benedictions without end on their heads. From the Place Louis Quinze, where they alight, all the way to the Hotel-de-Ville, it is one sea of tricolor cockades, of clear national muskets, one tempest of huzzings, hand-clappings, aided by "occasional rollings" of drum music. Harangues of due fervor are delivered, especially by Lally Tollendal, pious son of the ill-fated murdered Lally, on whose head, in consequence, a civic crown (of oak or parsley) is forced—which he forcibly transfers to Bailly's.

436. But surely, for one thing, the national guard should have a general! Moreau de Saint-Méry, he of the "three thousand orders," casts one of his signisignificant glances on the bust of Lafayette, which has stood there ever since the American war of liberty. Whereupon, by acclamation, Lafayette is nominated. Again, in room of the slain traitor or quasi-traitor Flesselles, President Bailly shall be—provost of the merchants? No; mayor of Paris! So be it. Maire de Paris! Mayor Bailly, General Lafayette; vive Bailly, vive Lafayette! the universal out-of-doors multitude rends the welkin in confirmation. And now, finally, let us to Notre-Dame for a Te Deum.

437. Toward Notre-Dame cathedral, in glad procession, these regenerators of the country walk, through a jubilant people, in fraternal manner, Abbé Lefevre, still black with his gunpowder services, walking arm in arm with the white-stoled archbishop. Poor Bailly comes upon the foundling children, sent to kneel to him, and "weeps." Te Deum, our archbishop officiating, is not only sung, but shot—with blank cartridges. Our joy is boundless, as our woe threatened to be. Paris, by her own pike and musket, and the valor of her own heart, has conquered the very war-gods—to the satisfaction now of majesty itself. A courier is, this night, getting under way for Necker; the people's minister, invited back by king, by national assembly, and nation, shall traverse France amid shoutings, and the sound of trumpet and timbrel.

438. Seeing which course of things, messieurs of the court triumvirate, messieurs of the dead-born Broglie ministry, and others such, consider that their part also is clear—to mount and ride. Off, ye too-royal Broglies, Polignacs, and princes of the blood; off while it is yet time! Did not the Palais Royal, in its late nocturnal "violent motions," set a specific price (place of payment not mentioned) on each of your heads? With precautions, with the aid of pieces of cannon and regiments that can be depended on, messieurs, between the sixteenth night and seventeenth morning, get to their several roads. Not without risk! Prince Condé has (or seems to have) "men galloping at full speed," with a view, it is thought, to fling him into the river Oise, at Pont-Sainte-Mayence. The Polignacs travel disguised, friends, not servants on their coach-box. Broglie has his own difficulties at Versailles, runs his own risks at Metz and Verdun, does, nevertheless, get safe to Luxemburg, and there rests.

439. This is what they call the first emigration, determined on, as appears, in full court-conclave, his majesty assisting—prompt he, for his share of it, to follow any counsel whatsoever. "Three sons of France and four princes of the blood of Saint Louis," says Weber, "could not more effectually humble the burghers of Paris than by appearing to withdraw in fear of their life." Alas, the burghers of Paris bear it with unexpected stoicism! The man D'Artois, indeed, is gone, but has he carried, for example, the land D'Artois, with him? Not even Bagatelle, the country-house (which shall be useful as a tavern); hardly the four-vault breeches, leaving the breeches-maker! As for old Foulon, one learns that he is dead; at least "a sumptuous funeral" is going on; the undertakers honoring him, if no other will. Intendant Berthier, his son-in-law, is still living, lurking; he joined Besenval on that Eumenides Sunday, appearing to treat it with levity, and is now fled, no man knows whither.

440. The emigration is not gone many miles, Prince Condé hardly across the Oise, when his majesty, according to arrangement—for the emigration also thought it might do good—undertakes a rather daring enterprise, that of visiting Paris in person. With a hundred members of assembly, with small or no military escort, which, indeed, he dismissed at the bridge of Sèvres, poor Louis sets out, leaving a desolate palace, a queen weeping, the present, the past, and the future all so unfriendly for her.

441. At the barrier of Passy, Mayor Bailly, in grand gala, presents him with the keys, harangues him, in academic style, mentions that it is a great day; that in Henri Quatre's case, the king had to make conquest of his people, but in this happier case, the people makes conquest of its king (a conquist son Roi). The king, so happily conquered, drives forward slowly, through a steel people, all silent, or shouting only Vive la nation; is harangued at the town-hall by Moreau of the three thousand orders, by King's Procureur M. Ethys de Corny, by Lally Tollendal and others; knows not what to think of it or say of it; learns that he is "restorer of French liberty"—as a statue of him, to be raised on the site of the Bastille, shall testify to all men. Finally, he is shown

442. It was Sunday when the red-hot balls hung over us, in mid air; it is now but Friday and "the revolution is sanctioned." An august national assembly shall make the constitution; and neither foreign pandour, domestic triumvirate, with leveled cannon, Guy-Faux powder plots (for that, too, was spoken of), nor any tyrannic power on the earth or under the earth, shall say to it, What dost thou? So jubilates the people, sure now of a constitution. Cracked Marquis Saint-Huruge is heard under the windows of the Château, murmuring sheer speculative treason.*
overburdened with money at this time) send riding couriers out from Paris, to gallop "on all radii," or highways toward all points of France? It is a miracle which no penetrating man will call in question.444

444. Already in most towns electoral committees were met, to regret Necker, in harangue and resolution. In many a town, as Rennes, Caen, Lyons, an ebullient people was already regretting him in brickbats and musketry. But now at every town's-end in France there do arrive, in these days of terror, "men," as men will arrive; nay, "men on horseback," since rumor oftentimes travels riding. These men declare, with alarmed countenance, the brigands to be coming, to be just at hand; and do then—ride on about their further business, be what it might! Whereupon the whole population of such town defensively flies to arms. Petition is soon thereafter forwarded to national assembly; in such peril and terror of peril, leave to organize yourself cannot be withheld; the armed population becomes everywhere an enrolled national guard. Thus rides rumor, careering along all radii, from Paris outward to such purpose; in few days, some say in not many hours, all France to the utmost borders bristles with bayonets. Singular, but undeniable—miraculous or not! But thus may any chemical liquid, though cooled to the freezing-point, or far lower, still continue liquid; and then, on the slightest stroke or shake, it at once rushes wholly into ice. Thus, has France, for

* Toulougeon, i. 96; Weber, etc., etc.

445. In Paris an electoral committee, with a new mayor and general, is urgent with belligerent workmen to resume their handicrafts. Strong dames of the market (dames de la halle) deliver congratulatory harangues, present "bouquets to the shrine of Sainte Geneviève." Unenrolled men deposit their arms—not so readily as could be wished—and receive "nine francs." With Te Deums, royal visits, and sanctioned revolution, there is halcyon weather, weather even of preternatural brightness; the hurricane being overblown.

446. Nevertheless, as is natural, the waves still run high, hollow rocks retaining their murmur. We are but at the 22d of the month, hardly above a week since the Bastille fell, when it suddenly appears that old Foulon is alive; nay, that he is here, in early morning, in the streets of Paris—the extortioner, the plotter, who would make the people eat grass, and was a liar from the beginning! It is even so. The deceptive "sumptuous funeral" (of some domestic that died); the hiding-place at Vitry toward Fontainebleau, have not availed that wretched old man. Some living domestic or dependent, for none loves Foulon, has betrayed him to the village. Merciless boors of Vitry unearth him, pounce on him, like hell-hounds; westward, old infamy, to Paris, to be long months and even years, been chemically dealt with: brought below zero; and now shaken by the fall of a Bastille, it instantaneously congeals into one crystallized mass of sharp-cutting steel! Guai a chi la tocca,—'Ware who touches it!
judged at the Hôtel-de-Ville! His old head, which seventy-four years have bleached, is bare; they have tied an emblematic bundle of grass on his back; a garland of nettles and thistles is round his neck; in this manner, led with ropes, goaded on with curses and menaces, must he, with his old limbs, sprawl forward—the pitiablest, most unpitied of all old men.

447. Sooey Saint-Antoine, and every street, musters its crowds as he passes—the hall of the Hôtel-de-Ville, the Place de Grève itself will scarcely hold his escort and him. Foulon must not only be judged righteously, but judged there where he stands, without any delay. Appoint seven judges, ye municipals, or seventy-and-seven; name them yourselves, or we will name them—but judge him! Electoral rhetoric, eloquence of Mayor Bailly, is wasted, for hours, explaining the beauty of the law’s delay. Delay, and still delay! Behold, O mayor of the people, the morning has worn itself into noon, and he is still unjudged! Lafayette, pressingly sent for, arrives, gives voice: This Foulon, a known man, is guilty almost beyond doubt: but may he not have accomplices? Ought not the truth to be cunningly pumped out of him—in the Abbaye prison? It is a new light! Sansculottism claps hands—at which hand-clapping, Foulon (in his fainness, as his destiny would have it) also claps. “See! they understand one another!” cries dark sansculottism, blazing into fury of suspicion. “Friends,” said “a person in good clothes,” stepping forward, “what is the use of judging this man? Has not he been judged these thirty years?” With wild yells, sansculottism clutches him in its hundred hands: he is whirled across the Place de Grève, to the “lanterne” (lamp-iron), which there is at the corner of the Rue de la Vannerie; pleading bitterly for life—to the deaf winds. Only with the third rope—for two ropes broke, and the quavering voice still pleaded—can he be so much as got hanged! His body is dragged through the streets; his head goes aloft on a pike, the mouth filled with grass: amid sounds as of Tophet, from a grass-eating people.

449. Surely if revenge is a “kind of justice,” it is a “wild” kind! O mad sansculottism, hast thou risen, in thy mad darkness, in thy soot and rags; unexpectedly, like an Enceladus, living buried, from under his Trinacria? They that would make grass be eaten do now eat grass in this manner! After long dumb-groaning generations, has the turn suddenly become thine? To such abysmal overturns, and frightful instantaneous inversions of the center-of-gravity, are human solecism all liable, if they but knew it; the more liable, the falser (and topheavier) they are!

of camps against the people, accused of many things; is he not Foulon's son-in-law, and, in that one point, guilty of all? In these hours, too, when sansculottism has its blood up! The shuddering municipals send one of their number to escort him with mounted national guards.

450. At the full of day the wretched Berthier, still wearing a face of courage, arrives at the barrier, in an open carriage, with the municipal beside him; 500 horsemen with drawn sabres; unarmed footmen enough, not without noise! Placards go brandished round him, bearing legibly his indictment, as sansculottism, with unlegal brevity, "in huge letters," draws it up.* Paris is come forth to meet him; with hand-clapings, with windows flung up, with dances, triumph songs, as of the furies. Lastly, the head of Foulon; this also meets him on a pike. Well might his "look become glazed" and sense fail him at such sight! Nevertheless, be the man's conscience what it may, his nerves are of iron. At the Hotel-de-Ville he will answer nothing. He says he obeyed superior orders; they have his papers; they may judge and determine; as for himself, not having closed an eye these two nights, he demands before all things to have sleep. Leaden sleep, thou miserable Berthier! Guards rise with him in motion toward the Abbaye. At the very door of the Hotel-de-Ville they are

* "Il est vole le Roi et la France." (He robbed the King and France). "He devoured the substance of the people." "He was the slave of the rich, and the tyrant of the poor." "He drank the blood of the widow and orphan." "He betrayed his country." See "Deux Amis." II. 57-52.

clutched, flung asunder as by a vortex of mad arms; Berthier whirls toward the lanterne. He snatches a musket, fells and strikes, defending himself like a mad lion; he is borne down, trampled, hanged, mangled; his head, too, and even his heart, flies over the city on a pike.

451. Horrible in lands that had known equal justice! Not so unnatural in lands that had never known it. "Le sang qui coule, est-il done si pur?" asks Barnave, intimating that the gallows, though by irregular methods, has its own. Thou, thyself, O reader, when thou turnest that corner of the Rue de la Vannerie, and discernest still that same grim bracket of old iron, wilt not want for reflections. "Over a grocer's shop," or otherwise, with "a bust of Louis XIV. in the niche under it," now no longer in the niche—it still sticks there; still holding out an inefficual light of fish-oil, and has seen worlds wrecked, and says nothing.

452. But to the eye of enlightened patriotism what a thunder-cloud was this, suddenly shaping itself in the radiance of the halcyon weather! Cloud of Erebus blackness, betokened latent electricity without limit. Mayor Bailly, General Lafayette throw up their commissions in an indignant manner; need to be flattered back again. The cloud disappears, as thunder-clouds do. The halcyon weather returns, though of a grayer complexion, of a character more and more evidently not supernatural.

453. Thus, in any case, with what rubs soever, shall the Bastille be abolished from our earth, and with it feudalism, despotism, and one hopes, scoundrelism generally, and all hard usage of man by his brother man. Also, the scoundrelism and hard usage are not so easy of abolition! But, as for the Bastille, the day after day, month after month, its sentinels and boulders tumbling down continually by express order of our municipals. Crowd of the curious roam through its caverns; gaze on the skeletons found walled-up, on the obliettes iron-cages, monstrous stone blocks, with padlock chains. One day we discern Mirabeau there, alone with the Genevese Dumont.* Workers and onlookers make reverent way for him, fling verses, flowers, on his path, Bastille-papers and curiosities into his carriage, with vivats.454. Ahle editors compile books from the Bastille archives, from what of them remain unburnt. The key of that robber-den shall cross the Atlantic, shall lie on Washington's hall-table. The great clock ticks now in a private patriotic clock-maker's apartment, no longer measuring hours of mere heaviness. Vanished is the Bastille, what we call vanished; the body, or sandstones, of it hanging in benign metamorphosis, for centuries to come, over the Seine waters as Pont Louis Seize;† the soul of it living, perhaps, still longer in the memories of men.

455. So far, ye august senators, with your tennis-court oaths, your inertia and impetus, your sagacity and pertinacity, have ye brought us. "And yet think, messieurs," as the petitioners justly urged, "you who were our saviors did themselves need saviors"—the brave Bastillers, namely, workmen of Paris, many of them in straitened pecuniary circumstances! Subscriptions are opened, lists are formed, more accurate than Elie's; harangues are delivered. A body of Bastille heroes, tolerably complete, did get together— comparable to the Argonauts, hoping to endure like them. But in little more than a year the whirlpool of things threw them aunder again, and they sank. So many highest superlatives achieved by man are followed by new higher, and dwindled into comparatives and positives! The siege of the Bastille, weighed with which, in the historical balance, most other sieges, including that of Troy town, are gossamer, cost, as we find, in killed and mortally wounded, on the part of the besiegers, some eighty-three persons; on the part of the besieged, after all that straw-burning, fire-pumping, and deluge of musketry, one poor solitary invalid shot stone-dead (roué-mort) on the battlements!† The Bastille fortress, like the city of Jericho, was overthrown by miraculous sound.

CONSOLIDATION.

CHAPTER I.

MAKE THE CONSTITUTION.

456. Here, perhaps, is the place to fix a little more precisely what these two words, French revolution, shall mean; for, strictly considered, they may have as many meanings as there are speakers of them. All things are in revolution, in change from moment to moment, which becomes sensible from epoch to epoch; in this time-world of ours there is properly nothing else but revolution and mutation, and even nothing else conceivable. Revolution, you answer, means speedier change. Whereupon one has still to ask, How speedy? At what degree of speed, in what particular points of this variable course, which varies in velocity, but can never stop till time itself stops, does revolution begin and end, cease to be ordinary mutation, and again become such? It is a thing that will depend on definition more or less arbitrary.

457. For ourselves, we answer that French revolution means here the open violent rebellion, and victory of disimprisoned anarchy against corrupt, worn-out authority; how anarchy breaks prison, bursts up from the infinite deep, and rages uncontrollable, immensurable, enveloping a world, in phases after phases of fever-frenzy, till the frenzy burning itself out, and what elements of new order it held (since all force holds such) developing themselves, the uncontrollable begot, if not reimprisoned, yet harnessed, and its mad forces made to work toward their object as sane regulated ones. For as hierarchies and dynasties of all kinds, theocracies, aristocracies, autocracies, strumpetocracies, have ruled over the world, so it was appointed in the decrees of providence, that this same victorious anarchy, Jacobinism, sansculottism, French revolution, horrors of French revolution, or what else mortals name it, should have its turn. The "destructive wrath" of sansculottism—this is what we speak, having unhappily no voice for singing.

458. Surely a great phenomenon, nay, it is a transcendental one, over-stepping all rules and experience, the crowning phenomenon of our modern time. For here, again, most unexpectedly, comes antique fanaticism in new and newest vesture, miraculous, as all fanaticism is. Call it the fanaticism of "making away with formulas (de humer les formules)." The world of formulas, the formed, regulated world, which all habitable world is, must needs hate such fanaticism like death, and be at deadly variance with it. The world of formulas must conquer it; or failing that, must die execrating it, anathematizing it—can, nevertheless, in nowise prevent its being and its having been. The anathemas are there, and the miruculous thing is there.

459. Whence it cometh? Whither it goeth? These are questions! When the age of miracles lay faded into the distance as an incredible tradition, and even the age of conventionalities was now old, and man's existence had for long generations rested on mere formulas which were grown hollow by course of time, and it seemed as if no reality any longer existed, but only phantasms of realities, and God's universe were the work of the tailor and upholsterer mainly, and men were buckram masks that went about becking and grimacing there—on a sudden, the earth yawns asunder, and amid Tartarean smoke and glare of fierce brightness, rises sansculottism, many-headed, fire-breathing, and asks, What think ye of me?

Well may the buckram masks start together, terror-struck,
" into expressive well-concerted groups! " It is, indeed, friends, a most singular, most fatal thing. Let whosoever is but buckram and a phantasm look to it; ili verily may it fare with him; here methinks he cannot much longer be. Woe also to many a one who is not wholly buckram, but partly real and human! The age of miracles has come back! " Behold the world-phoenix, in fire-consummation and fire-creation; wide are her fanning wings; loud is her death-melody of battle-thunders and falling towns; skyward lashes the funeral flame, enveloping
all things—it is the death-birth of a world!"

MAKE THE CONSTITUTION.

460. Whereby, however, as we often say, shall one unspeakable blessing seem attainable. This, namely, that man and his life rest no more on hollowness and a lie, but on solidity and some kind of truth. Welcome the beggarliest truth, so it be one, in exchange for the royalist sham! Truth of any kind breeds ever new and better truth; thus hard granite rock will crumble down into soil, under the blessed skyey influences, and cover itself with verdure, with fruitage and umbrae. But as for falsehood, which in like contrary manner grows ever failer, what can it, or what should it do but decrease, being ripe.
decom-pose itself gently or even violently, and return to the father of it—too probably in flames of fire?

461. Sansculottism will burn much, but what is incombustible it will not burn. Fear not sansculot-tism; recognize it for what it is, the portentous, inevtitable end of much, the miraculous beginning of much. One other thing thou mayest understand of it, that it, too, came from God, for has it not been?

From of old, as it is written, are his goings forth in the great deep of things, fearful and wonderful now as in the beginning; in the whirlwind, also, he speaks, and the wrath of men is made to praise him.

But to gauge and measure this immeasurable thing, and what is called account for it, and reduce it to a dead logic-formula, attempt not! Much less shalt thou shriek thyself hoarse cursing it, for that, to all needful lengths, has been already done. As an actually existing son of time, look with unspeakable manifold interest, oftenest in silence, at what the time did bring, therewith edify, instruct, nourish thyself, or were it but amuse and gratify thyself, as it is given thee.

462. Another question which at every new turn will rise on us, requiring ever new reply, is this, Where the French revolution specially is? In the king's palace, in his majesty's or her majesty's management and maltreatments, cabals, imbecilities and woes answer some few—whom we do not answer. In the national assembly, answer a large mixed multitude, who accordingly seat themselves in the reporter's chair, and therefrom noting what proclamations, acts, reports, passages of logic-force, bursts of parliamentary eloquence seem notable within doors, and what tumults and rumor of tumult become audible from without, produce volume on volume, and naming it History of the French Revolution, contentedly publish the same. To do the like, to almost any extent, with so many filed newspapers, choix des rapports, histoires parlementaires, as there are, amounting to many home-loads, were easy for us. Easy, but unprofitable. The national assembly, named now constituent assembly, goes its course, making the constitution, but the French revolution also goes its course.

463. In general, may we not say that the French revolution lies in the heart and head of every violent-speaking, of every violent-thinking Frenchman? How the 25,000,000 of such, in their perplexed combination, acting and counter-acting, may give birth to events, which event successively is the cardinal one, and from what point of vision it may best be surveyed, this is a problem. Which problem the best insight, seeking light from all possible sources, shifting its point of vision whithersoever vision or glimpse of vision can be had, may employ itself in solving, and be well content to solve in some tolerably approximate way.

464. As to the national assembly, in so far as it still towers eminent over France, after the manner of a car-borne carrosse, though now no longer in the van, and rings signals for retreat or for advance—it is and continues a reality among other realities. But in so far as it sits making the constitution, on the other hand, it is a fatuity and chimera mainly. Alas! in the never so heroic building of Montesquieu-Mably card-castles, though shouted over by the world, what interest is there? Occupied in that way, an august national assembly becomes for us little other than a sanhedrin of pedants, not of the gerund-grinding, yet of no fruitfuller sort; and its loud debating and recriminations about rights of man, right of peace and war, veto suspensif, veto absolu, what are they but so many pedants-curses, "May God confound you for your theory of irregular verbs!"

465. A constitution can be built, constitutions enough à Sieyès; but the frightful difficulty is that of getting men to come and live in them. Could Sieyès have drawn thunder and lightning out of heaven to sanction his constitution, it had been well, but without any thunder? Nay, strictly considered, is it not still true that without some such celestial sanction, given visibly in thunder or invisibly otherwise, no constitution can in the long-run be worth much more than the waste-paper it is written on? The constitution, the set of laws or prescribed habits of acting, that men will live under, is the one which images their convictions, their faith as to this wondrous universe, and what rights, duties, capabilities they have there; which stands sanctioned, therefore, by necessity itself, if not by a seen deity, then by an unseen one. Other laws, whereof there are always enough ready-made, are usurpations, which men do not obey but rebel against, and abolish at their earliest convenience.

466. The question of questions accordingly were, Who is it, especially for rebels and abolishers, can make a constitution? He that can image forth the general belief when there is one, that can impart one when, as here, there is none. A most rare man, ever, as of old, a god-missioned man! Here, however, in defect of such transcendent supreme man, time with its infinite succession of merely superior men, each yielding his little contribution, does much. Force, likewise (for, as antiquarian philosophers teach, the royal scepter was from the first something of a hammer, to crack such heads as could not be convinced), will all along find somewhat to do. And thus, in perpetual abolition and reparation, rending and mending, with struggle and strife, with present evil and the hope and effort toward future good, must the constitution, as all human things do, build itself forward, or unbuild itself and sink, as it can and may. O Sievè, and ye other committee-men, and twelve hundred miscellaneous individuals from all parts of France! what is the belief of France, and yours, if ye knew it? Properly, that there shall be no belief, that all formulas be swallowed. The constitution which will suit that? Alas! too clearly a no-constitution, an anarchy—which also, in due season, shall be vouchsafed you.

467. But, after all, what can an unfortunate national assembly do? Consider only this, that there are twelve hundred miscellaneous individuals, not a unit of whom but has his own thinking-apparatus, his own speaking-apparatus! In every unit of them is some belief and wish, different for each, both that France should be regenerated, and also that he individually should do it. Twelve hundred separate forces, yoked miscellaneous to any object, miscellaneous to all sides of it, and hidden pull for life!

468. Or is it the nature of national assemblies generally to do, with endless labor and clamor, nothing? Are representative governments mostly at bottom tyrannies too? Shall we say the tyrants, the ambitious, contentious persons, from all corners of the country do, in this manner, get gathered into one place, and there, with motion and counter motion, with jargon and hubbub, cancel one another, like the fabulous Kilkenny cats, and produce, for net-result, zero—the country meanwhile governing or guiding itself by such wisdom, recognized, or for most part unrecognized, as may exist in individual heads here.
and there? Nay, even that were a great improvement; for of old, with their Guelf factions and Ghibelline factions, with their red roses and white roses,
they were wont to cancel the whole country as well.
Besides, they do it now in a much narrower cockpit, within the four walls of their assembly house, and here and there an outpost of hustings and barrelheads; do it with tongues, too, not with swords—
all which improvements in the art of producing zero, are they not great? Nay, best of all, some happy continents (as the western one, with its savannahs, where whosoever has four willing limbs finds food under his feet and an infinite sky over his head) can do without governing. What sphinx-questions, which the distracted world, in these very generations, must answer or die!

CHAPTER II.

THE CONSTITUENT ASSEMBLY.

469. One thing an elected assembly of twelve hundred is fit for—destroying. Which, indeed, is but a more decided exercise of its natural talents for doing nothing. Do nothing, only keep agitating, debating, and things will destroy themselves.

470. So and not otherwise proved it with an august national assembly. It took the name "constituent," as if its mission and function had been to construct or build; which also, with its whole soul, it endeavored to do; yet, in the fates, in the nature of things, there lay for it precisely of all functions the most opposite to that. Singular what gospel men will believe, even gospels according to Jean Jacques! It was the fixed faith of these national deputies, as of thinking Frenchmen, that the constitution could be made; that they, there and then, were called to make it.
How, with the toughness of old Hebrews or Ishmaelite Moslem, did the otherwise light unbelieving people persist in this their credo quia impossible, and front the armed world with it, and grow fanatic and even heroic, and do exploits by it! The constituent assembly's constitution, and several others, will, being printed and not manuscript, survive to future generations as an instructive, well-nigh incredible, document of the time; the most significant picture of the then existing France, or at lowest, picture of these men's picture of it.

471. But in truth and seriousness, what could the national assembly have done? The thing to be done was, actually as they said, to regenerate France, to abolish the old France and make a new one, quietly or forcibly, by concession or by violence; this by the law of nature has become inevitable. With what degree of violence depends on the wisdom of those that preside over it. With perfect wisdom on the part of the national assembly, it had all been otherwise; but whether, in any wise, it could have been peaceful, nay, other than bloody and convulsive, may still be a question.

472. Grant, meanwhile, that this constituent assembly does to the last continue to be something. With a sigh, it sees itself incessantly forced away from its infinite divine task of perfecting "the theory of irregular verbs"—to finite terrestrial tasks, which latter have still a significance for us. It is the cyno- sure of revolutionary France, this national assembly. All work of government has fallen into its hands, or under its control; all men look to it for guidance. In the middle of that huge revolt of twenty-five millions, it hovers always aloft as carroccio or battle-standard, impelling and impelled, in the most confused way; if it cannot give much guidance, it will still seem to give some. It emits pacificatory proclama- tions not a few, with more or with less result. It authorizes the enrollment of national guards, lest brigands come to devour us, and reap the unripe crops. It sends missions to quell "effervescences," to deliver men from the lanterne. It sends petitions and complaints from all mortals, so that every mortal's complaint, if it cannot get redressed, may at least hear itself complain. For the rest, an august national assembly can produce parliamentary eloquence, and appoint committees. Committees of the constitution, of reports, of researches, and of much else, which again yield mountains of printed paper, the theme of new parliamentary eloquence, in bursts or in plenteous smooth-flowing floods. And so, from the waste vortex whereon all things go whirling and grinding, organic laws, or the similitude of such, slowly emerge.

473. With endless debating, we get the rights of man written down and promulgated—true paper basis of all paper constitutions. Neglecting, cry the opponents, to declare the duties of man! Forgetting, answer we, to ascertain the rights of man—one of the fatalest omissions! Nay sometimes, as on the 4th of August, our national assembly, fired suddenly by an almost preternatural enthusiasm, will get through whole masses of work in one night. A memorable night, this 4th of August; dignitaries temporal and spiritual, peers, archbishops, parliament-presidents, each outdoing the other in patriotic devotion, come successively to throw their now untenable possessions on the "altar of the fatherland." With louder and louder vivats—for, indeed, it is "after dinner" too—they abolish tithes, seigniorial dues, gabelle, excessive preservation of game; nay, privilege, immunity, feudalism root and branch; then appoint a Te Deum for it, and so finally disperse about three in the morning, striking the stars with their sublime heads. Such night, unforeseen but forever memorable, was this of the 4th of August, 1789. Miraculous, or semi-miraculous, some seem to think it. A new night of Pentecost, shall we say, shaped according to the new time and new church of Jean Jacques Rousseau? It had its causes, also its effects.

474. In such manner labor the national deputies; perfecting their theory of irregular verbs, governing
CONSOLIDATION.

France and being governed by it, with toil and noise—cutting asunder ancient and intolerable bonds, and, for new ones, assiduously spinning ropes of sand. Were their labors a nothing or a something, yet the eyes of all France being reverently fixed on them, history can never very long leave them altogether out of sight.

475. For the present, if we glance into that assembly-hall of theirs, it will be found, as is natural, "most irregular." As many as "a hundred members are on their feet at once;" no rule in making motions, or only commencements of a rule; spectators' gallery allowed to applaud, and even to hiss; president appointed once a fortnight, raising many times no serene head above the waves. Nevertheless, as in all human assemblages, like does begin arranging itself to like; the perennial rule, Ubi homines sunt modi sunt, proves valid. Rudiments of methods disclose themselves, rudiments of parties. There is a right side (coté droit), a left side (coté gauche) sitting on M. le President's right hand, or on his left; the coté droit conservative, the coté gauche destructive. Intermediate in Anglomanic constitutionalism, or two-chamber royalism, with its Mouniers, its Lallys, fast verging toward nonentity. Pre-eminent, on the right side, pleads and perorates Cazalès the dragoon-captain, eloquent, mildly fervent, earning for himself the shadow of a name. There also blusters Barrel Mirabeau, the younger Mirabeau, not without wit: dusky D'Espérménil does nothing but sniff and ejaculate, might it be fondly thought, lay prostrate the elder Mirabeau himself would he but try," which he does not. Last and greatest, see, for one moment, the Abbé Maury, with his Jesuitic eyes, his impassive brass face, "image of all the cardinal sins." Indomitable, unquenchable, he fights Jesuitic-rhetorically, with toughest lungs and heart—for throne, especially for altar and tithes. So that a shrill voice exclaims once, from the gallery, "Messieurs of the clergy, you have to be shaved; if you wriggle too much, you will get cut."*476

476. The left side is also called the D'Orléans side, and sometimes, derisively, the Palais Royal. And yet, so confused, real-imaginary seems everything, "it is doubtful as Mirabeau said, whether D'Orléans himself belonged to that same D'Orléans party." What can be known and seen is that his moon-visor does beam forth from that point of space. There, likewise, sits sea-green Robespierre, throwing in his light weight with decision, not yet with effect. A thin, lean puritan and precisian, he would make away with formulas, yet lives, moves, and has his being wholly in formulas of another sort. "People," such, according to Robespierre, ought to be the royal method of promulgating laws. "People, this is the law I have framed for thee; dost thou accept it?"—answered, from right side, from centre and left, by inextinguishable laughter.] Yet men of insight...

discern that Sea-green may by chance go far. "This man," observes Mirabeau, "will do somewhat; he believes every word he says."

Abbé Sieyes is busy with mere constitutional work, wherein, unluckily, fellow-workmen are less pliable than, with one who has completed the science of politics, they ought to be. Courage, Sieyes, nevertheless! Some twenty months of heroic travail, of contradiction from the stupid, and the constitution shall be built; the top-stone of it brought out with shouting—say, rather, the top-paper, for it is all paper; and thou hast done in it what the earth or the heaven could require, thy utmost. Note likewise this trio, memorable for several things, memorable were it only that history is written in an epigram: "Whatsoever these three have in hand," it is said "Dupont thinks it, Barnave speaks it, and Lameth does it." 477. But royal Mirabeau? Conspicuous among all parties, raised above and beyond them all, this man rises more and more. As we often say, he has an eye; he is a reality, while others are formulas and eyeglasses. In the transient he will detect the perennial; find some firm footing even among paper vortexes. His fame is gone forth to all lands; it gained the heart of the crabbed old friend of man himself before he died. The very postilions have heard of Mirabeau; when an impatient traveler complains that the team is insufficient, his postilion answers, "Yes, Monsieur, the wheelers are weak; but my mirabeau (main horse), you see, is a right one (Mais mon mirabeau est excellent)."

478. And now, reader, thou shalt quit this noisy discrepancy of a national assembly, not (if thou be of human mind) without pity. Twelve hundred brother-men are there, in the center of 25,000,000, fighting so fiercely with fate and with one another; struggling their lives out, as most sons of Adam do, for that which profiteth not. Nay, on the whole, it is admitted further to be very dull. "Dull as this day's assembly," said some one. "Why date (Pourquoi dater) ? answered Mirabeau.

479. Consider that there are twelve hundred; that they not only speak, but read their speeches; and even borrow and steal speeches to read! With twelve hundred decent speakers, and their Noah's deluge of vociferous commonplace, silence unattainable may well seem the one blessing of life. But figure twelve hundred pamphleteers, droning forth perpetual pamphlets, and no man to gag them! Neither, as in the American congress, do the arrangements seem perfect. A senator has not his own desk and newspaper here; of tobacco (much less of pipes) there is not the slightest provision. Conversation itself has to be transacted in a low tone; with continual interruption; only "pencil-notes" circulate freely, "in incredible numbers, to the foot of the very tribune." Such work is it, regenerating a nation, perfecting one's theory of irregular verbs!

CHAPTER III.

THE GENERAL OVERTURN.

480. Of the king's court, for the present, there is almost nothing whatever to be said. Silent, deserted are these halls; royalty languishes forsaken of its war-god and all its hopes, till once the Eil-de-Bœuf rally again. The scepter is departed from King Louis, is gone over to the Salle des Menus, to the Paris town-hall, or one knows not whither. In the July days, while all ears were yet deafened by the crash of the Bastille, and ministers and princes were scattered to the four winds, it seemed as if the very valets had grown heavy of hearing. Besenval, also in flight toward infinite space, but hovering a little at Versailles, was addressing his majesty personally for an order about post-horses; when lo, "the valet-in-waiting places himself familiarly between his majesty and me," stretching out his rascal neck to learn what it was. His majesty, in sudden choler, whirled round, made a clutch at the tongs; "I gently prevented him; he grasped my hand in thankful­ness, and I noticed tears in his eyes."* 481. Poor king, for French kings also are men! Louis Fourteenth himself once clutched the tongs, and even smote with them; but then it was at Louvois, and Madame Maintenon ran up. The queen sits weeping in her inner apartments, surrounded by weak women; she is "at the height of unpopularity," universally regarded as the evil genius of France. Her friends and familiar counselors have all fled, and fled, surely, on the foolishest errand. The Château Polignac still frowns aloft, on its "bold and enormous cubical rock," amid the blooming champaigns, amid the blue girdling mountains of Auvergne;* but no Duke and Duchess Polignac look forth from it; they have fled, they have "met Necker at Bâle;" they shall not return. That France should see her nobles resist the irresistible, inevitable, with the face of angry men, was unhappy, not unexpected; but with the face and sense of pettish children? This was her peculiarity. They understood nothing, would understand nothing. Does not, at this hour, a new Polignac, first-born of these two, sit reflective in the castle of Ham,† in an astonishment he will never recover from, the most confused of existing mortals? 482. King Louis has his new ministry, mere popularities, Old-President Pompignan, Necker coming back in triumph, and other such.‡ But what will it avail him? As was said, the scepter, all but the wooden gilt scepter, has departed elsewhither. Volition, determination is not in this man; only innocence, insouciance, dependence on all persons but himself, on all circumstances but the circumstances he were lord of. So troubled internally in our Versailles and its work. Beautiful, if seen from afar, resplendent like a sun; seen near at hand, a mere sun's atmosphere, hiding darkness, confused ferment of ruin!

483. But over France there goes on the indisputable "destruction of formulas," transactions of realities that follow therefrom. So many millions of persons, all gyved and nigh strangled with formulas, whose life nevertheless, at least the digestion and hunger of it, was real enough! Heaven has at length sent an abundant harvest; but what profits it the poor man, when earth with her formulas interposes? Industry, in these times of insurrection, must needs lie dormant; capital, as usual, not circulating, but stagnating timorously in nooks. The poor man is short of work, is therefore short of money; nay even had he money, bread is not to be bought for it. Were it plotting of aristocrats, plotting of D'Orléans; were it brigands, preternatural terror, and the clang of Phæbus Apollo's silver bow — enough, the markets are scarce of grain, plentiful only in tumult. Farmers seem lazy to thresh—being either "bribed," or needing no bribe, with prices ever rising, with perhaps rent itself no longer so pressing. Neither, what is singular, do municipal enactments "that along with so many measures of wheat you shall sell so many of rye," and other the like, much mend the matter. Dragoons with drawn swords stand ranked among the corn sacks, often more dragoons than sacks. Meal-mobs abound, growing into mobs of a still darker quality.

484. Starvation has been known among the French commonly before this, known and familiar. Did not we see them, in the year 1775, presenting, in sallow faces, in wretchedness and raggedness, their petition of grievances; and, for answer, getting a brand-new gallows forty feet high? Hunger and darkness, through long years! For look back on that earlier Paris riot, when a great personage, worn out by debauchery, was believed to be in want of blood-baths; and mothers, in worn raiments, yet with living hearts under it, "filled the public places" with their wild Rachel-cries—stilled also by the gallows. Twenty years ago, the friend of men (preaching to the deaf) described the Limousin peasants as wearing a "pain-stricken (souffre-douleur) look," a look past complaint, "as if the oppression of the great were like the hail and the thunder, a thing irreparable, the ordinance of nature." And now if, in some great hour, the shock of a falling Bastille should awaken you; and it were found to be the ordinance of art merely, and remediable, reversible!

485. Or has the reader forgotten that "flood of savages," which in sight of the same friend of men, descended from the mountains at Mont d'Or? Lank-haired haggard faces, shapes raw-boned, in high sabots, in woolen jupes, with leather girdles studded with copper nails! They rocked from foot to foot, and beat time with their elbows, too, as the quarrel and battle which was not long in beginning, went on; shouting fiercely, the lank faces distorted into the similitude of a cruel laugh. For they were darkened and hardened; long had they been the prey of excise-men and tax-men, of "clerks with the cold spurt of their pen." It was the fixed prophecy of our old marquis, which no man would listen to, that "such government by blind-man's-buff, stumbling along too far, would end by the general overturn (the culbute générale)!"

No man would listen, each went his thoughtless way—and time and destiny also traveled on. The government by blind-man's-buff, stumbling along, has reached the precipice inevitable for it. Dull drudgery, driven on by clerks with the cold dastard spurt of their pen, has been driven—into a communion of drudges! For now, moreover, there have come the strangest confused tidings, by Paris journals with their paper wings, or, still more portentous, where no journals are,* by rumor and conjecture—oppression not inevitable, a Bastille prostrate, and the constitution fast getting ready! Which constitution, if it be something and not nothing, what can it be but bread to eat? The traveler, "walking up hill, bridle in hand," overtakes "a poor woman," the image, as such commonly are, of drudgery and scarcity, looking sixty years of age, though she is not yet twenty-eight." They have seven children, her poor drudge and she, a farm with one cow, which helps to make the children soup, also one little horse, or garrón. They have rents and quit-rents, hens to pay this seigneur, out-sacks to that; king's taxes, statute-labor, die of starvation while there was bread reaped by him? It is among the mights of man.

459. Seventy-two châteaux have flamed aloft in the Mâconnais and Beaujolais alone; this seems the center of the conflagration, but it has spread over Dauphîne, Alsace, the Lyonnaise; the whole southeast is in a blaze. All over the north, from Rouen to Metz, disorder is abroad; smugglers of salt go openly in armed bands, the barriers of towns are burnt, toll-gatherers, tax-gatherers, official persons put to flight. "It was thought," says Young, "the people, from hunger, would revolt;" and we see they have done it. Desperate lackals, long prowling aimlessly, now finding hope in desperation itself, everywhere form a nucleus. They ring the church-bell by way of tocsin, and the parish turns out to the work.* Ferocity, atrocity, hunger, and revenge, such work as we can imagine!

460. Ill stands it now with the seigneur, who, for example, "has walled up the only fountain of the township," who has ridden high on his chartier and parchments, who has preserved game not wisely, but too well. Churches also, and canneries, are sacked without mercy, which have shorn the flock too close, forgetting to feed it. Woe to the hand over which sansculottism, in its day of vengeance, tramps rough-shod—shod in sabots! high bred seigneurs, with their delicate women and little ones, had to "fly half-naked," under cloud of night, glad to escape the flames and even worse. You meet them at the tables-

d'hote of inns, making wise reflections or foolish, that "rank is destroyed;" uncertain whether they shall now wend.* The mestayer will find it convenient to be slack in paying rent. As for the tax-gatherer, he, long hunting as a biped of prey, may now find himself hunted as one; his majesty's exchequer will not "fill up the deficit" this season; it is the notion of many that a patriot majesty, being the restorer of French liberty, has abolished most taxes, though, for their private ends, some men make a secret of it.

461. Where this will end? In the abyss, one may prophesy, whither all delusions are, at all moments, traveling; where this delusion has now arrived. For if there be a faith from of old, it is this, as we often repeat, that no lie can live forever. The very truth has to change its vesture from time to time, and be born again. But all lies have sentence of death written down against them, in heaven's chancery itself; and, slowly or fast, advance incessantly toward their hour. "The sign of a grand seigneur being landlord," says the vehement, plain-spoken Arthur Young, "are wastes, landses, deserts, ling; go to his residence, you will find it in the middle of a forest peopled with deer, wild boars, and wolves. The fields are scenes of pitiable management, as the houses are of misery. To see so many millions of hands that would be industrious, all idle and starving; oh, if I were legislator of France for one day, I would make these great lords skip again!"* O Ar-

* See Young, i. 149, etc.
† Ibid., i. 13, 48, 84, etc.
thou now actually beholdst them skip—wilt thou grow to grumble at that too?

492. For long years and generations it lasted, but the time came. Featherbrain, whom no reasoning and no pleading could touch, the glare of the firebrand had to illuminate; there remained but that method. Consider it, look at it! The widow is gathering nettles for her children's dinner; a perfumed seigneur, delicately lounging in the Gil-de-Bœuf, has an alchemy whereby he will extract from her the third nettle, and name it rent and law, such an arrangement must end. Ought it not? But, oh most fearful is such an ending! Let those to whom God, in his great mercy, has granted time and space, prepare another and milder one.

493. To some, it is a matter of wonder that the seigneurs did not do something to help themselves, say, combine and arm, for there were a "hundred and fifty thousand of them," all valiant enough. Unhappily, a hundred and fifty thousand, scattered over wide provinces, divided by mutual ill-will, cannot combine. The highest seigneurs, as we have seen, had already emigrated—with a view of putting France to the blush. Neither are arms now the peculiar property of seigneurs, but of every mortal who has ten shillings wherewith to buy a second-hand firelock.

494. Besides, those starving peasants, after all, have not four feet and claws, that you could keep them down permanently in that manner. They are not even of black color, they are mere unwashed... knows not, breaking itself in pieces; here impotent, the tyrannous. National guards are unskilful and of doubtful purpose, soldiers are inclined to mutiny; there is danger that they two may quarrel, danger that they may agree. Strasburg has seen riots; a town-hall torn to shreds, its archives scattered white on the winds, drunk soldiers embracing drunk citizens for three days, and Mayor Dietrich and Marshal Rochambeau reduced nigh to desperation.*

497. Through the middle of all which phenomena is seen, on his triumphant transit—"escorted," through Béfort for instance, "by fifty national horsemen and all the military music of the place"—M. Necker returning from Bifflé! Glorious as the meridian, though poor Necker himself partly guesses whither it is leading. One highest culminating day at the Paris town-hall, with immortal vivats, with wife and daughter kneeling publicly to kiss his hand, with Besenval's pardon granted—but, indeed, revoked before sunset; one highest day, but then lower days, and even lower, down even to lowest! Such magic is in a name, and in the want of a name. Like some enchanted Mambrino's helmet, essential to victory, comes this "savior of France," besheated, becymbaled by the world, alas! so soon to be disenchanted, to be pitched shamefully over the lists as a barber's basin! Gibbon "could wish to show him (in this ejected, barber's basin state) to any man of solidity, who were minded to have the soul burnt out of him, and become a caput mortuum, by ambition, unsuccessful or successful."*

498. Another small phasis we add, and no more, how, in the autumn months, our sharp-tempered Arthur has been "pestered for some days past," by shot, lead-drops, and slugs, "rattling five or six times into my chaise and about my ears;" all the mob of the country gone out to kill game!† It is even so. On the cliffs of Dover, over all the marches of France, there appear, this autumn, two signs on the earth—emigrant flights of French seigneurs, emigrant-winged flights of French game! Finished, one may say, or as good as finished, is the preservation of game on this earth, completed for endless time. What part it had to play in the history of civilization is played: plaudite; exeat!

499. In this manner does sansculottism blaze up, illustrating many things, producing, among the rest, as we saw, on the 4th of August, that semi-miraculous night of Pentecost in the national assembly; semi-miraculous, which had its causes and its effects. Feudalism is struck dead, not on parchment only, and by ink, but in very fact, by fire—say by self-combustion. This conflagration of the south-east will abate, will be got scattered to the west, or elsewhere; extinguish it will not till the fuel be all done.

CHAPTER IV.

IN QUEUE.

500. If we look now at Paris, one thing is too evident: that the bakers' shops have got their queues, or tails, their long strings of purchasers, arranged in tail, so that the first come be the first served—were the shop once open! This waiting in tail, not seen since the early days of July, again makes its appearance in August. In time, we shall see it perfected by practice to the rank almost of an art, and the art, or quasi-art, of standing in tail become one of the characteristics of the Parisian people, distinguishing them from all other peoples whatsoever.

501. But consider, while work itself is so scarce, how a man must not only realize money, but stand waiting (if his wife is too weak to wait and struggle) for half-days in the tail, till he get it changed for dear bad bread! Controversies, to the length, sometimes of blood and battery, must arise in these exasperated queues. Or if no controversy, then it is but one accordant pange lingua of complaint against the powers that be. France has begun her long curriculum of hungering, instructive and productive beyond academic curricula, which extends over some seven most strenuous years. As Jean Paul says of his own life, "To a great height shall the business of hungering go."

502. Or consider, in strange contrast, the jubilee ceremonies, for, in general, the aspect of Paris presents these two features, jubilee ceremonials and scarcity of victual. Processions enough walk in jubilee, of young women, decked and dizeded, their ribbons all tricolor, moving, with song and tabor, to the shrine of Sainte Geneviève, to thank her that the Bastille is down. The strong men of the market, and the strong women, fall not with their bouquets and speeches. Abbé Fauchet, famed in such work (for Abbé Lefèvre could only distribute powder), blesses tricolor cloth for the national guard, and makes it a national tricolor flag, victorious, or to be victorious, in the cause of civil and religious liberty all over the world. Fauchet, we say, is the man for Te Deums and public consecrations, to which, as in this instance of the flag, our national guard will "reply with volleys of musketry," church and cathedral though it be, filling Notre Dame with such noisiest fuliginous ams, significant of several things.

503. On the whole, we will say our new Mayor Bailly, our new Commander Lafayette, named also "Scipio-Americanus," have bought their preferment dear. Bailly rides in gilt state-coach, with beef-eaters and sumptuousity, Camille Desmoulins, and others, sniffing at him for it; Scipio bestrides the "white charger," and waves with civic plumes in sight of all France. Neither of them, however, does it for nothing, but, in truth, at an exorbitant rate. At this rate, namely, of feeding Paris, and keeping it from fighting. Out of the city funds, some 17,000 of the utterly destitute are employed digging on Montmartre, at tenpence a day, which buys them, at market price, almost two pounds of bad bread. They look very yellow when Lafayette goes to harangue them. The town-hall is in travail night and day; it must bring forth bread, a municipal constitution, regulations of all kinds, curbs on the sansculottic press, above all, bread, bread.

501. Purveyors prowl the country far and wide, with the appetite of lions, detect hidden grain, purchase open grain; by gentle means or forcible, must and will find grain. A most thankless task, and so difficult, so dangerous, even if a man did gain some trifle by it! On the 19th of August there is food for one day. Complaints there are that the food is spoiled, and produces an effect on the intestines, not corn but plaster of Paris! Which effect on the intestines, as well as that "smarting in the throat and palate," a town-hall proclamation warns you to disregard, or even to consider as drastic-beneficial. The Mayor of Saint-Denis, so black was his bread, has, by a dyspeptic populace, been hanged on the lamppost there. National guards protect the Paris corn-market; first ten suffrers, then, 600. Busy are ye, Bailly, Brissot de Warville, Condorcet, and ye others!

502. For, as just hinted, there is a municipal constitution to be made too. The old Bastille electors, after some ten days of psalmodying over their glorious victory, began to hear it asked, in a spleenetic tone,

Who put you there? They accordingly had to give place, not without meanings and audible growlings on both sides, to a new larger body, specially elected for that post. Which new body, augmented, altered, then fixed finally at the number of 300, with the title of town representatives (représentans de la commune), now sits there, rightly portioned into committees, assiduous making a constitution, at all moments when not seeking flour.

503. And such a constitution, little short of miraculous, one that shall consolidate the revolution! The revolution is finished then? Mayor Bailly and all respectable friends of freedom would fain think so. Your revolution, like jelly sufficiently boiled, needs only to be poured into shapes of constitution, and "consolidated" therein? Could it, indeed, contrive to cool, which last, however, is precisely the doubtful thing, or even the not doubtful!

504. Unhappy friends of freedom, consolidating a revolution! They must sit at work there, their pavilion spread on very chaos, between two hostile worlds, the upper court-world, the neither sansculottic one, and, beaten on by both, toil painfully, perilously—doing, in sad literal earnest, "the impossible."

THE FOURTH ESTATE.

They must sit at work there, their pavilion spread on very chaos, between two hostile worlds, the upper court-world, the neither sansculottic one, and, beaten on by both, toil painfully, perilously—doing, in sad literal earnest, "the impossible."

Who put you there? They accordingly had to give place, not without meanings and audible growlings on both sides, to a new larger body, specially elected for that post. Which new body, augmented, altered, then fixed finally at the number of 300, with the title of town representatives (représentans de la commune), now sits there, rightly portioned into committees, assiduous making a constitution, at all moments when not seeking flour.

507. And such a constitution, little short of miraculous, one that shall consolidate the revolution! The revolution is finished then? Mayor Bailly and all respectable friends of freedom would fain think so. Your revolution, like jelly sufficiently boiled, needs only to be poured into shapes of constitution, and "consolidated" therein? Could it, indeed, contrive to cool, which last, however, is precisely the doubtful thing, or even the not doubtful!

508. Pamphleteering opens its abysmal throat wider and wider, never to close more. Our philosophies, indeed, rather withdraw, after the manner of Marmontel, "retiring in disgust the first day." Abbé Raynal, grown gray and quiet in his Marseilles domicile, is little content with this work; the last literary act of the man will again be an act of rebellion, an indignant "Letter to the Constituent Assembly," answered by "the order of the day." Thus, also, philosophes Morellet puckers discontented brows, being indeed threatened in his benefices by that 4th of August—it is clearly going too far. How astonishing that those "haggard figures in woolen jupes" would not rest as satisfied with speculation and victorious analysis as we!

509. Alas, yes; speculation, philosophism, once the ornament and wealth of the saloon, will now coin itself into mere practical propositions, and circulate on street and highway, universally, with results! A fourth estate of able editors springs up, increases and multiplies, irrepressible, incalculable. New printers, new journals, and ever new (so prudent is the world), let our 300 curb and consolidate as they can. Loudlot, under the wing of Prudhomme dull-blustering printer, edits weekly his Révolutions de Paris in an acid, emphatic manner. Acid, corrosive, as the spirit of sloes and copperas, is Marat—friend of the people—struck already with the fact that the national assembly, so full of aristocrats, "can do nothing," except dissolve itself and make way for a better; that the town-hall representatives are little other than babblers and imbeciles, if not even knaves.

Poor is this man, squalid, and dwells in garrets; a man unlovely to the sense, outward and inward, a man forbid—and is becoming fanatical, possessed with fixed idea. Cruel hand of nature! Did nature, O poor Marat, as in cruel sport, knead thee out of her hearings and miscellaneous waste clay, and fling thee forth, stepdame-like, a distraction into this distracted eighteenth century? Work is appointed thee there, which thou shalt do. The 300 have summoned and will again summon Marat, but always he croaks forth answer sufficient; always he will defy them, or elude them, and endure no gag.

510. Carra, "ex-secretary of a decapitated Hospodar," and then of a necklace-cardinal—likewise of a pamphleteer, adventurer in many scenes and lands—draws nigh to Mercier of the Tableau de Paris, and, with foam on his lips, proposes an Annales Patriques. The Moniteur goes its prosperous way, Barrère "weeps," on paper as yet loyal; Rivarol, Royou are not idle. Deep calls to deep, your domine Salvum fac Regem shall awaken Pange Lingua; with an Ami-du-Peuple there is a king's-friend newspaper, Ami-du-Roi. Camille Desmoulins has appointed himself procureur-général de la lanterne (attorney-general of the lamp-iron), and pleads not with atrocity, under an atrocious title; editing weekly his brilliant Révolutions of Paris and Brabant. Brilliant, we say, for if, in that thick mark of journalism, with its dull blustering, with its fixed or loose fury, any ray of genius great thee, be sure it is Camille's. The thing that Camille touches, he with his light finger adorns; brightness plays, gentle, unexpected, amid horrible confusions; often is the word of Camille worth reading when no other's is. Questionable Camille, how thou glitterest with a fallen, rebellious, yet still semi-celestial light, as is the starlight on the brow of Lucifer! Son of the morning, into what times and what lands art thou fallen!

511. But in all things there is good—though it be not good for "consolidating revolutions." Thousand wagon-loads of this pamphleteering and newspaper matter lie rotting slowly in the public libraries of our Europe. Snatched from the great gulf, like oysters by bibliomaniac pearl-divers, there must they first rot, then what was pearl, in Camille or others, may be seen as such, and continue as such.

512. Nor has public speaking declined, though Lafayette and his patrols look sour on it. Loud always is the Palais Royal, loudest the Café de Foy; such a miscellany of citizens and citizenesses circulating there. "Now and then," according to Camille, "some citizens employ the liberty of the press for a private purpose, so that this or the other patriot finds himself short of his watch or pocket-handkerchief!" But for the rest, in Camille's opinion, nothing can be a livelier image of the Roman Forum. "A patriot proposes his motion; if it finds any supporters, they make him mount on a chair and speak. If he is applauded, he prospers and redacts; if he is hissed, he goes his ways." Thus they, circulating and perorating. Tall shaggy Marquis Saint-Huruge, a man that has had losses, and has deserved them, is seen eminent, and also heard. "Bellowing" is the character of his voice, like that of a bull of Bashan, voice which drowns all voices, which causes frequently the hearts of men to leap. Cracked or half-cracked is this tall marquis's head, uncracked are his lungs; the cracked and the uncracked shall alike avail him.

513. Consider further that each of the forty-eight districts has its own committee, speaking and motioning continually, aiding in the search for grain, in the search for a constitution, checking and spurring the poor 300 of the town-hall. That Danton, with a "voice reverberating from the domes," is president of the Cordeliers district, which has already become a Goshen of patriotism. That apart from the "seventeen thousand utterly necessitous, digging on Montmartre," most of whom, indeed, have got passes, and been dismissed into space "with four shillings"—there is a strike or union, of domestics out of place, who assemble for public speaking; next, a strike of tailors, for even they will strike and speak; farther, a strike of journeymen cordwainers, a strike of apothecaries, so dear is bread.* All these, having struck, must speak, generally under the open canopy, and pass resolutions—Lafayette and his patrols watching them suspiciously from the distance.

514. Unhappy mortals, such tugging and lugging, and throttling of one another, to divide, in some not intolerable way, the joint felicity of man in this earth, when the whole lot to be divided is such a feast of shells! "Diligent are the 300; none equals Scipio-Americans in dealing with mobs. But surely all these things bode ill for the consolidating of a revolution.

BOOK SEVENTH.

THE INSURRECTION OF WOMEN.

PATROLLOTISM.

515. No, friends, this revolution is not of the consolidating kind. Do not fires, fevers, sown seeds, chemical mixtures, men, events—all embodiments of force that work in this miraculous complex of forces named universe—go on growing, through their natural phases and developments, each according to its kind, reach their height, reach their visible decline, finally sink under, vanishing, and what we call die? They all grow; there is nothing but what grows, and shoots forth into its special expansion—once give it leave to spring. Observe too that each grows with a rapidity proportioned, in general, to the madness and unhealthiness there is in it, slow regular growth, though this also ends in death, is what we name health and sanity.

516. A sansculottism, which has prostrated bastilles, which has got pike and musket, and now goes burning châteaus, passing resolutions and haranguing under roof and sky, may be said to have sprung, and, by law of nature, must grow. To judge by the madness and diseasiveness both of itself and of the soil and element it is in, one might expect the rapidity and monstrosity would be extreme.

517. Many things, too, especially all diseased things, grow by shoots and fits. The first grand fit and shooting-forth of sansculottism was that of Paris conquering its king, for Bailly’s figure of rhetoric was all too sad a reality. The king is conquered, going at large on his parole, on condition, say, of absolutely good behavior—which, in these circumstances, will unhappily mean no behavior whatever. A quite untenable position, that of majesty put on its good behaviour! Alas, is it not natural that whatever lives try to keep itself living? Whereupon his majesty’s behavior will soon become exceptionable; and so the second grand fit of sansculottism, that of putting him in durance, cannot be distant.

518. Necker, in the national assembly, is making moan as usual about his déficit; barriers and custom-houses burnt, the tax-gatherer hunted, not hunting; his majesty’s exchequer all but empty. The remedy is a loan of thirty millions; then, on still more enticing terms, a loan of eighty millions; neither of which loans, unhappily, will the stock-jobbers venture to lend. The stock-jobber has no country except his own black pool of agio.

519. And yet, in those days, for men that have a country, what a glow of patriotism burns in many a heart, penetrating inwards to the very purse! So early as the 7th of August, a don patriotique, "patriotic gift of jewels to a considerable extent," has been solemnly made by certain Parisian women, and solemnly accepted with honorable mention. Whom forthwith all the world takes to imitating and emulating. Patriotic gifts, always with some heroic eloquence, which the president must answer, and the assembly listen to, flow in from far and near in such number that the honorable mention can only be performed in "lists published at stated epochs." Each gives what he can. The very cordwainers have behaved magnificently. One landed proprietor gives a forest; fashionable society gives its shoe-buckles—takes cheerfully to shoe-ties. Unfortunate-females give what they "have amassed in loving."* The smell of all cash, as Vespasian thought, is good.

520. Beautiful, and yet inadequate! The clergy must be "invited" to melt their superfluous church-plate—in the royal mint. Nay, finally, a patriotic contribution, of the forcible sort, has to be determined on, though unwillingly. Let the fourth part of your declared yearly revenue, for this once only, be paid down; so shall a national assembly make the constitution, undistracted, at least, by insolvency. Their own wages, as settled on the 17th of August, are but eighteen francs a day, each man; but the public service must have sinews, must have money. To oppose the deficit—not to "combleter (or choke) the deficit," if you or mortal could! For withal, as Mirabeau was heard saying, "It is the deficit that saves us."

521. Toward the end of August our national assembly in its constitutional labors has got so far as the question of veto—shall majesty have a veto on the national enactments, or not have a veto? What speeches were spoken, within doors and without, clear and also passionate logic, imprecations, combinations, gone happily for most part to limbo! Through the cracked brain and uncracked lungs of Saint-Huruge, the Palais Royal bellows with veto. Journalism is busy; France rings with veto. "I never shall forget," says Dumont, "my going to Paris one of those days with Mirabeau, and the crowd of people we found waiting for his carriage about Le Jay the bookseller's shop. They flung themselves before him, conjuring him, with tears in their eyes, not to suffer the veto absolu. They were in a frenzy. "Monsieur le Comte, you are the people's father; you must save us; you must defend us against those villains who are bringing back despotism. If the king get his veto, what is the use of national assembly? We are slaves; all is done.""* Friends, if the sky fall, there will be catching of larks! Mirabeau, adds Dumont, was eminent on such occasions; he answered vaguely, with a patrician imperturbability, and bound himself to nothing.

522. Deputations go to the Hotel-de-Ville; anonymous letters to aristocrats in the national assembly, threatening that fifteen thousand, or sometimes that sixty-thousand, "will march to illuminate you." The Paris districts are astir; petitions signing; Saint-Huruge sets forth from the Palais Royal with an escort of fifteen-hundred individuals to petition in person. Resolute, or seemingly so, is the tall shaggy marquis, is the Café de Foy; but resolute also is Commandant-General Lafayette. The streets are all beset by patrols; Saint-Huruge is stopped at the Barrière des Bons Hommes; he may bellow like the bulls of Bashan, but absolutely must return. The brethren of the Palais Royal "circulate all night," and make motions under the open canopy, all coffee-houses being shut. Nevertheless Lafayette and the town-hall do prevail; Saint-Huruge is thrown into prison: veto absolu adjusts itself into suspensio icio, prohibition not forever, but for a term of time, and this doom’s-clamor will grow silent as the others have done.

* "Histore Parlamentaire," ii. 427.

523. So far has consolidation prospered, though with difficulty, repressing the nether sans-culotte world, and the constitution shall be made. With difficulty, amid jubilee and scarcity, patriotic gifts, bakers’s queues, Abbé-Faucliet harangues, with their amen of platoon musketry! Scipio-Americanus has described thanks from the national assembly and France. They offer him stipends and emoluments to a handsome extent, which he, covetous of far other blessedness than mere money, does, in his chivalrous way, without scruple, refuse.

524. To the Parisian common man, meanwhile, one thing remains inconceivable—that now when the Bastille is down, and French liberty restored, grain should continue so dear. Our rights of man are voted, feudalism and all tyranny abolished; yet behold we stand in queue! It is aristocrat forestallors—a court still bent on intrigues? Something is rotten somewhere.

And yet, alas, what to do? Lafayette, with his patrols, prohibits everything, even complaint. Saint-Huruge and other heroes of the veto lie in durance. People’s friend Marat was seized; printers of patriotic journals are fettered and forbidden; the very hawkers cannot cry till they get license and leader badges. Blue national guards ruthlessly dissipate all groups, scour with leveled bayonets the Palais Royal itself. Pass on your affairs along the Rue Taranne, the patrol, presenting his bayonet, cries, To the left! Turn into the Rue-Saint-Benoit, lie cries, To the right! A judicious patriot (like Camille Desmoulins in this instance) is driven, for quietness sake, to take the gutter.

525. O, much suffering people, our glorious revolution is evaporating in tricolor ceremonies and complimentary harangues! Of which latter, as Lousialet acridly calculates, "upward of two thousand have been delivered within the last month at the town-hall alone." And our mouths, unfilled with bread, are to be shut, under penalties? The caricaturist promulgates his emblematic tablature: Le Patrouillistes.
lotisme chassant le Patriotisme (Patriotism driven out by Patrollotism). Ruthless patrols, long superfine harangues, and scanty ill-baked loaves—more like baked bath-bricks—which produce an effect on the intestines! Where will this end? In consolidation.

CHAPTER II.

O RICHARD, O MY KING.

526. For, alas, neither is the town-hall itself without misgivings. The neither sansculottic world has been suppressed hitherto, but then the upper court-world! Symptoms there are that the Eil-de-Bœuf is rallying.

More than once in the town-hall sanhedrin, often enough from those outspoken bakers'-queues, has the wish uttered itself; O that our restorer of French liberty were here; that he could see with his own eyes, not with the false eyes of queens and cabals, and his really good heart be enlightened! For falsehood still environs him—intriguing Dukes de Guiche, with body-guards, scouts of Bouillé; a new flight of intriguers, now that the old is flown. What else means this advent of the Regiment de Flandre, entering Versailles, as we hear, on the 23d of September, with two pieces of cannon? Did not the Versailles national guard do duty at the Château? Had they not Swiss—Hundred Swiss—guardes-du-corps, body guards, so-called? Nay, it would seem, the number of body-guards on duty has, by a maneuver, been doubled; the new relieving battalion of them arrived at its time, but the old relieved one does not depart!

527. Actually, there runs a whisper through the best-informed upper circles, or a nod still more portentous than whispering, of his majesty's flying to Metz, of a bond (to stand by him therein) which has been signed by noblesse and clergy, to the incredible amount of thirty, or even of sixty thousand. Lafayette coldly whispers it, and coldly asseverates it, to Count d'Estaing, one of the bravest men, quakes to the core lest some lackey overhear it, and tumbles thoughtful, without sleep, all night. * Regimen de Flandre as we said, is clearly arrived. His majesty, they say, hesitates about sanctioning the 4th of August, makes observations, of chilling tenor on the very rights of man! Likewise, may not all persons, the bakers-queues themselves discern, on the streets of Paris, the most astonishing number of officers on furlough, crosses of St. Louis, and such-like? Some reckon "from a thousand to twelve hundred." Officers of all uniforms, nay, one uniform never before seen by eye—green faced with red! The tricolor cockade is not always visible; but what, in the name of Heaven, may these black cockades, which some wear, forshadow?

528. Hunger whets everything, especially suspicion and indignation. Realities themselves in this Paris, have grown unreal, preternatural. Phantasms once more stalk through the brain of hungry France. O ye laggards and dastards, cry shrill voices from the queues, if ye had the hearts of men, ye would take your pikes and second-hand firelocks, and look into it; not leave your wives and daughters to be starved, murdered, and worse! Peace, women! The heart of man is bitter and heavy; patriotism, driven out by patroliotism, knows not what to resolve on.

529. The truth is, the Céil-de-Boeuf has rallied, to a certain unknown extent. A changed Céil-de-Boeuf; with Versailles national guards, in their tricolor cockades, doing duty there; a court all flaring with tricolor! Yet even to a tricolor court men will rally. Ye loyal hearts, burnt-out seigneurs, rally round your queen! With wishes, which will produce hopes, which will produce attempts!

530. For, indeed, self-preservation being such a law of nature, what can a rallied court do but attempt, and endeavor, or call it plot—with such wisdom and unwisdom as it has? They will fly, escorted, to Metz, where brave Bouillé commands; they will raise the royal standard; the bond-signatures shall become armed men. Were not the king so languid! Their bond, if at all signed, must be signed without his privity. Unhappy king, he has but one resolution—not to have a civil war. For the rest, he still hunts, having ceased lock-making; he still dozes and digests, is clay in the hands of the potter. Ill will it fare with him, in a world where all is helping itself; where, as has been written, “whosoever is not hammer must be stithy,” and “the very hyssop on the wall grows there, in that chink, because the whole universe could not prevent its growing!”

531. But as for the coming up of this Regiment de Flandre, may it not be urged that there were Saint-Huruge petitions, and continual meal-mobs? Undebauched soldiers, be their plot, or only dim elements of a plot, are always good. Did not the Versailles municipality (an old monarchic one, not yet refounded into a democratic) instantly second the proposal? Nay, the very Versailles national guard, wearied with continual duty at the château, did not object; only draper Lecointre, who is now Major Lecointre, shook his head. Yes, friends, surely it was natural this Regiment de Flandre should be sent for, since it could be got. It was natural that, at sight of military bandoleers, the heart of the rallied Céil-de-Boeuf should revive, and maids of honor and gentlemen of honor speak comfortable words to epauletéd defenders and to one another. Natural also, and mere common civility, that the Body-Guards, a regiment of gentlemen, should invite their Flandre brethren to a dinner of welcome! Such invitation, in the last days of September, is given and accepted.

532. Dinners are defined as “the ultimate act of communion;” men that can have communion in nothing else, can sympathetically eat together, can still rise into some glow of brotherhood over food and wine. The dinner is fixed on, for Thursday the 1st of October, and ought to have a fine effect.
Further, as such dinner may be rather extensive, and even the non-commissioned and the common man be introduced, to see and to hear, could not his majesty’s opera apartment, which has lain quite silent ever since Kaiser Joseph was here, be obtained for the purpose? The hall of the opera is granted; the Salon d’Hercule shall be drawing-room. Not only the officers of Flandre, but of the Swiss, of the Hundred Swiss; may of the Versailles national guard, such of them as have any loyalty, shall feast; it will be a repast like few.

533. And now suppose this repast, the solid part of it, transacted, and the first bottle over. Suppose the customary loyal toasts drunk, the king’s health, the queen’s with deafening vivats—that of the nation “omitted,” or even “rejected.” Suppose champagne flowing, with pot-valorous speech, with instrumental music, empty featherheads growing over the noisier, in their own emptiness, in each others’ noise. Her majesty, who looks unusually sad to-night (his majesty sitting dulled with the day’s hunting), is told that the sight of it would cheer her. Behold! She enters there, issuing from her state-rooms, like the moon from clouds, this fairest unhappy queen of hearts; royal husband by her side, young dauphin in her arms! She descends from the boxes, amid splendor and acclaim, walks queen-like round the tables, gracefully escorted, gracefully nodding, her looks full of sorrow, yet of gratitude and daring, with the hope of France on her mother-bosom! And now, the band striking up, O Richard, O mon roi, l’univers t’abandonne (O Richard, O my king, the world is all forsaking thee), could man do no other than rise to height of pity, of loyal valor? Could featherheaded young ensigns do other than, by white Bourbon cockades, handed them from fair fingers, by waving of swords drawn to pledge the queen’s health, by trampling of national cockades, by scaling the boxes, whence intrusive murmurs may come, by vociferation, tripudiation, sound, fury and distraction, within doors and without—testify what tempest-tost state of vacuity they are in? Till champagne and tripudiation do their work, and all lie silent, horizontal, passively slumbering with need-of-battle dreams!

534. A natural repast, in ordinary times a harmless one, now fatal as that of Thyestes, as that of Job’s sons, when a strong wind smote the four corners of their banquet-house! Poor ill-advised Marie Antoinette, with a woman’s vehemence, not with a sovereign’s foresight! It was so natural, yet so unwise. Next day, in public speech of ceremony, her majesty declares herself “delighted with the Thursday.”

535. The heart of the Ciel-de-Bœuf glows into hope, into daring, which is premature. Rallied maids of honor, waited on by abbés, sew “white cockades;” distribute them, with words, with glances, to epauleted youths, who, in return, may kiss, not without fervor, the fair sewing fingers. Captains of horse and foot go swashing with “enormous white cockade;” may, one Versailles national captain has mounted the... like, so witching were the words and glances, and laid aside his tricolor! Well may Major Lecointre shake his head with a look of severity, and speak audible resentful words. But now a swashbuckler, with enormous white cockade, over-hearing the major, invites him insolently, once and then again elsewhere, to recant, and failing that, to duel. Which latter feat Major Lecointre declares that he will not perform, not, at least, by any known laws of France; that he, nevertheless, will, according to mere law of nature, by dirk and blade, "exterminate" any "vile gladiator" who may insult him or the nation — where-upon (for the major is actually drawing his implement) "they are parted," and no word of split.

CHAPTER III.
BLACK COCKADES.

536. But fancy what effect this Thyestes repast, and trampling on the national cockade, must have had in the Salle des Menus, in the famishing bakers'-queues at Paris! Nay, such Thyestes repasts, it would seem, continue. Flandre has given its counter-dinner to the Swiss and Hundred Swiss, then on Saturday there has been another.

537. Yes, here with us is famine, but yonder at Versailles is food, enough and to spare! Patriotism, stands in queue, shivering, hunger-struck, insulted by patrolootism, while bloody-minded aristocrats, heated with excess of high living, trample on the national cockade. Can the atrocity be true? Nay, look — green uniforms faced with red, black cockades — the color of night! Are we to have military on-fall, and death also, by starvation? For, behold, the Corbeil corn-boat, which used to come twice a-day, with its plaster-of-Paris meal, now comes only once. And the town-hall is deaf, and the men are laggard and dastard! At the Café de Foy, this Saturday evening, a new thing is seen, not the last of its kind — a woman engaged in public speaking. Her poor man, she says, was put to silence by his district, their presidents and officials would not let him speak. Wherefore she here, with her shrill tongue, will speak, denouncing, while her breath endures, the Corbeil boat, the plaster-of-Paris bread, sacrilegious opera-dinners, green uniforms, pirate aristocrats, and those black cockades of theirs!

538. Truly, it is time for the black cockades at least to vanish. Then patrolootism itself will not protect. Nay, sharp-tempered "M. Tassin," at the Tuileries parade on Sunday morning, forgets all national military rule, starts from the ranks, wrenches down one black cockade which is swashing ominous there, and tramples it fiercely into the soil of France. Patrolootism itself is not without suppressed fury. Also the districts begin to stir; the voice of President Danton reverberates in the Cordeliers; People's-friend Marat has flown to Versailles and back again—swart bird, not of the halcyon kind.*

539. And so patriot meets promenading patriot this Sunday, and sees his own grim care reflected on the face of another. Groups, in spite of patrollotism, which is not so alert as usual, fluctuate deliberative—groups on the bridges, on the quais, at the patriotic caffes. And ever; as any black cockade may emerge, rises the many-voiced growl and bark, A bas (Down)!

All black cockades are ruthlessly plucked off; one individual picks his up again, kisses it, attempts to refix it, but "hundred canes start into the air," and he desists. Still worse went it with another individual, doomed by extempore plebiscitum to the lanterne; saved with difficulty by some active Corps-de-Garde. Lafayette sees signs of an effervescence, which he doubles his patrols, doubles his diligence, to prevent. So passes Sunday the 4th of October, 1789.

540. Sullen is the male heart, repressed by patrollotism; vehement is the female, irresistible. The public-speaking woman at the Palais Royal was not the only speaking one. Men know not what the pantry is when it grows empty, only house-mothers know. O women, wives of men that will only calculate and not act! Patrollotism is strong, but death by starvation and military onfall is stronger. Patrollotism represses male patriotism; but female patriotism? Will guards named national thrust their bayonets into the bosoms of women? Such thought, or rather such dim, unshaped raw material of a thought, ferments universally under the female night-cap, and by earliest daybreak on slight hint will explode.

CHAPTER IV.

THE MENADS.

541. If Voltaire once, in splenetic humor, asked his countrymen, "But you, Gaulishes, what have you invented?" they can now answer, The art of insurrection. It was an art needed in those last singular times; an art for which the French nature, so full of vehemence, so free from depth, was, perhaps, of all others the fittest. Accordingly, to what a height, one may well say of perfection, has this branch of human industry been carried by France within the last half century! Insurrection, which Lafayette thought might be "the most sacred of duties," ranks now, for the French people, among the duties which they can perform. Other mobs are dull masses, which roll onward with a dull, fierce tenacity, a dull fierce heat, but emit no light-flashes of genius as they go. The French mob, again, is among the liveliest phenomena of our world. So rabid, audacious; so clear-sighted, inventive, prompt to seize the moment; instinct with life to its finger-ends! That talent, were there no other, of spontaneously standing in queue, distinguishes, as we said, the French people from all peoples, ancient and modern.

542. Let the reader confess, too, that, taking one thing and another, perhaps few terrestrial appearances are better worth considering than mobs. Your mob is a genuine outburst of nature; issuing from, or communicating with the deepest deep of nature. When so much goes grinning and grimacing as a lifeless formality, and under the stiff buckram no heart can be felt beating, here once more, if nowhere else, is a sincerity and reality. Shudder at it, or even shriek over it, if thou must; nevertheless, consider it. Such a complex of human forces and individualities hurled forth in their transcendental mood, to act and react on circumstances and one another; to work out what it is in them to work. The thing they will do is known to no man, least of all to themselves. It is the inflammablest, immeasurable firework, generating, consuming itself. With what phases, to what extent, with what results it will burn off, philosophy and perspicacity conjecture in vain.

543. "Man," as has been written, "is forever interesting to man; nay, properly there is nothing else interesting." In which light also may we not discern why most battles have become so wearisome? Battles in these ages are transacted by mechanism; with the slightest possible development of human individuality or spontaneity men now even die and kill one another in an artificial manner. Battles ever since Homer's time, when they were fighting mobs, have mostly ceased to be worth looking at, worth reading or remembering. How many wearisome bloody battles does history strive to represent, or, even in a husky way, to sing—and she would omit or carelessly slur over this one insurrection of women?

544. A thought, or dim raw material of a thought, was fermenting all night, universally in the female head, and might explode. In squalid garret on Monday morning, maternity awakes to hear children weeping for bread. Maternity must forth to the streets, to the herb-markets and bakers' queues; meets there with hunger-stricken maternity, sympathetic, exasperative. O we unhappy women! But, instead of bakers' queues, why not to aristocratic palaces, the root of the matter? Allons! Let us assemble. To the Hotel-de-Ville to Versailles, to the lanterne!

545. In one of the guard-houses of the Quartier Saint-Eustache, "a young woman" seizes a drum—for how shall national guards give fire on women, on a young woman? The young woman seizes the drum, sets forth beating it, "uttering cries relative to the dearth of grains." Descend, O mothers, descend, ye Judiths, to food and revenge! All women gather and go; crowds storm all stairs, force out all women; the female insurrectionary force, according to Camille, resembles the English naval one; there is a universal "press of women." Robust dames of the hall, slim mantua-makers, assiduous, risen with the dawn; ancient virginity tripping to matins; the housemaid, with early broom; all must go.
ye, O women; the laggard men will not act; they say we ourselves may act!

546. And so, like snowbreak from the mountains, for every staircase is a melted brook, it storms tumultuous, wild-shrieking, toward the Hotel-de-Ville. Tumultuous, with or without drum-music; for the Faubourg Saint Antoine also has tucked-up its gown, and with besom-staves, fire-irons, and even rusty pistols (void of ammunition), is flowing on. Sounds of it flies with a velocity of sound to the utmost barriers. By seven o'clock, on this raw October morning, fifth of the month, the town-hall will see wonders. Nay, as chance would have it, a male party are already there, clustering tumultuously round some national patrol and a baker who has been seized with short weights. They are there, and have even lowered the rope of the lanterne. So that the official persons have to smuggle forth the short-weighing baker by back-doors, and even send "to all the districts" for more force.

547. Grand it was, says Camille, to see so many Judiths, from 8,000 to 10,000 of them in all, rushing out to search into the root of the matter! Not un-frightful it must have been; ludicrous, and most unmanageable. At such hour the overwatched 300 are not yet stirring, none but some clerks, a company of national guards, and M. de Gouvion, the major-general. Gouvion has fought in America for the cause of civil liberty, a man of no considerable heart, but deficient in head. He is, for the moment, in his back apartment, assuaging Usher Maillard, the Bastille-sergeant, who has come, as too many do, with "representations." Their assuagement is still incomplete when our Judiths arrive.

548. The national guards form on the outer stairs, with leveled bayonets; the 10,000 Judiths press up, resistless, with obstacions, with outspread hands—merely to speak to the mayor. The rear forces them; nay, from male hands in the rear stones already fly; the national guard must do one of the two things—sweep the Place de Grève with cannon or else open to right and left. They open; the living deluge rushes in. Through all rooms and cabinets upward to the topmost belfry; ravenous; seeking arms, seeking mayors, seeking justice; while, again, the better-dressed speak kindly to the clerks, point out the misery of these poor women, also their ailments, some even of an interesting sort.

549. Poor M. de Gouvion is shiftless in this extremity; a man shiftless, perturbed, who will one day commit suicide. How happy for him that Usher Maillard the shifty was there at the moment, though making representations! Fly back, thou shifty Maillard, seek the Bastille company, and, oh, return fast with it; above all, with thy own shifty head! For, behold, the Judiths can find no mayor or municipal; scarcely in the topmost belfry can they find poor Abbé Lefèvre, the powder-distributor. Him, for want of a better, they suspend there in the pale morning light, over the top of all Paris, which swims in one's failing eyes—a horrible end? Nay, * "Deux Amis," iii. 141-60.
the rope broke, as French ropes often did, or else an Amazon cut it. Abbé Lefévre falls some twenty feet, rattling among the leads, and lives long years after, though always with a "tremblment in the limbs."*

550. And now doors fly under hatchets; the Ju-diths have broken the armory, have seized guns and cannons, three money-bags, paper-heaps; torches flare;
in few minutes, our brave Hotel-de-Ville, which dates from the fourth Henry, will, with all that it holds, be in flames!

USHER MAILLARD.

551. In ñames, truly—were it not that Usher Maillard, swift of foot, shifty of head, has returned.
Maillard, of his own motion—for Gouvion or the rest would not even sanction him—snatches a drum, descends the porch-stairs, ran-tan, beating sharp, with loud rolls, his rogues'-march: To Versailles! Allons; à Versailles! As men beat on kettled or warming-pan, when angry she-bees, or say, flinging desperate wasps, are to be hived; and the desperate insects hear it, and cluster round it—simply as round a guidance, where there was none; so now these Menads round shifty Maillard, riding-usher of the Châtelet. The axe pauses uplifted; Abbé Lefévre is left half-hanged; from the belfry downward all vomits itself. What rub-a-dub is that? Stanislas Maillard, Bastille hero, will lead us to Versailles?

Joy to thee, Maillard, blessed art thou above riding-ushers! Away, then, away!

552. The seized cannon are yoked with seized car-horses, brown-locked. Demoiselle Théroigne, with pike and helmet, sits there as gunneress, "with haughty eye and serene fair countenance;"* comparable, some think, to the Maid of Orleans, or even recalling
"the idea of Pallas Athene."* Maillard (for his drum still rolls) is, by heaven-rending acclamation, admitted general. Maillard hastens the languid march.
Maillard, beating rhythmic, with sharp ran-tan, all along the quais, leads forward with difficulty his Menadic host. Such a host—marched not in silence!
The bargeman pauses on the river; all waggons and coach-drivers fly; men peer from windows—not women, lest they be pressed. Sight of sights; bac-chantes, in these ultimate formalized ages! Bronze Henri looks on from his Pont-Neuf; the monarchic Louvre, Medicean Tuileries, see a day like none heretofore seen.

553. And now Maillard has his Menads in the Champs Elysées (fields Tartarean rather), and the Hotel-de-Ville has suffered comparatively nothing. Broken doors, an Abbé Lefévre, who shall never more distribute powder, three sacks of money, most part of which (for sansculottism, though famishing, is not without honor) shall be returned; this is all the damage. Great Maillard! A small nucleus of order is round his drum, but his outerskirts fluctuate like the mad ocean, for rascality male and female is flowing in on him, from the four winds; guidance there is none but in his single head and two drumsticks.

554. O Maillard, when, since war first was, had general of force such a task before him as thou this day? Walter the Penniless still touches the feeling heart, but then Walter had sanction, had space to turn in, and also his crusaders were of the male sex. Thou, this day, disowned of heaven and earth, art general of Menads. Their inarticulate frenzy thou must, on the spur of the instant, render into articulate words, into actions that are not frantic. Fail in it, this way or that! Pragmatical officiality, with its penalties and law-books, waits before thee; Menads storm behind. If such hewed off the melodious head of Orpheus, and hurled it into the Peneus waters, what may they not make of thee—thee rhythmic merely, with no music but a sheepskin drum! Maillard did not fail. Remarkable Maillard, if fame were not an accident, and history a distillation of rumor, how remarkable wert thou!

555. On the Elysian Fields there is pause and fluctuation; but, for Maillard, no return. He persuades his Menads, clamorous for arms and the arsenal, that no arms are in the arsenal; that an unarmed attitude, and petition to a national assembly, will be the best; he hastily nominates or sanctions generals, captains of tens and fifties—and so, in loosest-flowing order, to the rhythm of some "eight drums"
557. Nevertheless, news, dispatches from Lafayette, or vague noise of rumor, have pierced through by side roads. In the national assembly, while all is busy discussing the order of the day; regretting that there should be anti-national repasts in opera-halls, that his majesty should still hesitate about accepting the rights of man, and hang conditions and pend-ventures on them—Mirabeau steps up to the presi-dent, experienced Mounier as it chanced to be, and articulates, in bass undertone, "Mounier, Paris marche sur nous (Paris is marching on us)." "May be (Je n'en sais rien):" "Believe it or disbelieve it, that is not my concern; but Paris, I say, is marching on us. Fall suddenly unwell; go over to the château; tell them this. There is not a moment to lose."—"Paris marching on us?" responds Mounier, with an atrabiliar accent; "well, so much the better! We shall the sooner be a republic." Mirabeau quits him, as one quits an experienced president getting blind-fold into deep waters, and the order of the day con-tinues as before.

558. Yes, Paris is marching on us, and more than the women of Paris! Scarcely was Maillard gone, when M. de Gouvion's message to all the districts, and such tocsin and drumming of the générale, began to take effect. Armed national guards from every district, especially the Grenadiers of the Center, who are our old Gardes Françaises, arrive, in quick sequence, on the Place de Grève. An "immense people" is there; Saint-Antoine, with pike and rusty firelock, is all crowding thither, be it welcome or un-welcome. The Center Grenadiers are received with cheering; "It is not cheers that we want," answer they gloomily; "the nation has been insulted; to arms and come with us for orders!" Ha, sits the wind so? Patriotism and patrolism are now one!

559. The three hundred have assembled; "all the committees are in activity," Lafayette is dictating dispatches for Versailles, when a deputation of the Center Grenadiers introduces itself to him. The deputation makes military obeisance, and thus speaks, not without a kind of thought in it; "mon général, we are deputed by the six companies of grenadiers. We do not think you a traitor, but we think the government betrays you; it is time that this end. We cannot turn our bayonets against women crying to us for bread. The people are mis-erable, the source of the mischief is at Versailles; we must go seek the king, and bring him to Paris. We must exterminate (exterminer) the Regiment de Flandre and the Gardes-du-Corps, who have dared to trample on the national cockade. If the king be too weak to wear his crown, let him lay it down. You will crown his son, you will name a council of re-gency; and all will go better."

* "Deux Amis," III. 161.
sailles; we must go and bring the king to Paris; all the people wish it (tout le peuple le veut)."

560. My general descends to the outer staircase, and harangues, once more in vain. "To Versailles! To Versailles!" Mayor Bailly, sent for through floods of sansculottism, attempts academic oratory from his gilt state-coach; realizes nothing but infinite hoarse cries of, "Bread! To Versailles!"—and gladly shrinks within doors. Lafayette mounts the white charger, and again harangues, and harangues, with eloquence, with firmness, indignant demonstration, with all things but persuasion. "To Versailles! To Versailles!" So lasts it, hour after hour—for the space of half a day.

561. The great Scipio-Americanus can do nothing, not so much as escape. "Morbleu, mon general," cry the grenadiers, crowding their ranks as the white charger makes a motion that way, "you will not leave us, you will abide with us!" A perilous juncture: Mayor Bailly and the municipals sit quaking within doors; my general is prisoner without; the Place de Grève, with its thirty thousand regulars, its whole irregular Saint-Antoine and Saint-Marceau, is one minatory mass of clear or rusty steel, all hearts set, with a moody fixedness, on one object. Moody, fixed are all hearts; tranquil is no heart—if it be not that of the white charger, who paws there, with arched neck, composedly champing his bit, as if no world, with its dynasties and eras, were now rushing down. The drizzly day bends westward, the cry is still, "To Versailles!"

562. Nay, now, borne from afar, come quite sinister cries, hoarse, reverberating in long-drawn hollow murmurs, with syllables, too, like those of "lanterne!" Or else, irregular sansculottism may be marching off, of itself; with pikes, nay, with cannon. The inflexible Scipio does at length, by aide-de-camp, ask of the municipals whether or not he may go. A letter is handed out to him, over armed heads; sixty thousand faces flash fixedly on his, there is stillness, and no bosom breathes till he have read. By heaven, he grows suddenly pale! Do the municipals permit? "Permit, and even order."—since he can no other. Clangor of approval rends the welkin. To your ranks, then; let us march!

563. It is, as we compute, toward three in the afternoon. Indignant national guards may dine for once from their haversacks; dined and undined, they march with one heart. Paris flings up her windows, "claps hands," as the avengers, with their shrilling drums and shalms tramp by; she will then sit pensive, apprehensive, and pass a sleepless night. On the white charger, Lafayette, in the slowest possible manner going and coming, and eloquently haranguing among the ranks, rolls onward with his thirty thousand. Saint-Antoine, with pikes and cannon, has preceded him; a mixed multitude of all and of no arms, hovers on his flanks and skirts; the country once more pauses agape: Paris marche sur nous.

"Doux Amis," iii. 155.
CHAPTER VI.

TO VERSAILLES.

564. For, indeed, at this moment, Maillard has halted his draggled Menads on the last hill-top; and now Versailles, and the château de Versailles, and far and wide the inheritance of royalty, opens to the wondering eye. From far on the right, over Marly and Saint-Germain-en-Laye; round toward Rambouillet, on the left; beautiful all; softly embosomed, as if in sadness, in the dim, moist weather! And near before us is Versailles, new and old, with that broad frondent Avenue de Versailles between—stately-frondent, broad, 300 feet as men reckon, with its four rows of elms; and then the château de Versailles, ending in royal parks and pleasures, gleaming lakeslets, arbors, labyrinths, the Menagerie, and Great and Little Triomphe. High-towered dwellings, leafy pleasant places, where the gods of this lower world abide; whence, nevertheless, black care cannot be excluded; whither Menadic lingering is even now advancing, armed with pike-thyrsi!

565. Yes, yonder, mesdames, where our straight frondent avenue, joined, as you note, by two frondent brother avenues from this hand and from that, spreads out into Place Royal and Palace Forecourt; yonder is the Salle des Menus. Yonder an august assembly sits regenerating France. Forecourt, Court of Marble, court narrowing into court you may discern next, or fancy; on the extreme verge of which that glass-dome, visibly glittering like a star of hope, is the—Ciil-de-Boeuf! Yonder, or nowhere in the world is bread baked for us. But, O mesdames, were not one thing good—that our canons, with Demoiselle Theroigne and all show of war be put to the rear? Submission beseems petitioners of a national assembly; we are strangers in Versailles—whence, too audibly, there comes even now a sound as of toisin and général! Also to put on, if possible, a cheerful countenance, hiding our sorrows, and even to sing? Sorrow, pitted of the heavens, is hateful, suspicious to the earth. So counsels shifty Maillard, haranguing his Menads on the heights near Versailles.

566. Cunning Maillard's dispositions are obeyed. The draggled insurrectionists advance up the avenue, "in three columns," among the four elm-rows, "singing Henri Quatre," with what melody they can and shouting, "Vive le roi. Versailles, though the elm-rows are dripping wet, crowds from both sides, with, "Vivent nos Parisiennes, (Our Paris ones forever!)"

567. Prickers, scouts, have been out toward Paris, as the rumor deepened; whereby his majesty gone to shoot in the woods of Meudon, has been happily discovered, and got home. and the général and toisin set a-sounding. The Body-Guards are already drawn up in front of the palace-grates, and look down the Avenue de Versailles, sulky, in wet buck-skins.

* See "Histoire Parlementaire," III. 70-117. "Deux Amis," III. 100-77, etc.
Flandre, too, is there, repentant of the opera-repast. Also dragoons dismounted are there. Finally Major Leconiure, and what can he gather of the Versailles national guard—though it is to be observed, our colonel, that same sleepless Count d'Estaing, giving neither order nor ammunition, has vanished most improperly, one supposes into the Ciel-de-Bœuf. Red-coated Swiss stand within the grates, under arms. There likewise, in their inner room, "all the ministers," Saint-Priest, Lamentation Pompignan and the rest, are assembled with M. Necker; they sit with him there; blank, expecting what the hour will bring.

568. President Mounier, though he answered Mirabeau with a tant mieux, and affected to slight the matter, had his own forebodings. Surely, for these four weary hours he has reclined not on roses! The order of the day is getting forward; a deputation to his majesty seems proper, that it might please him to grant "acceptance puré and simple" to those constitution-articles of ours; the "mixed qualified acceptance," with its peradventures, is satisfactory to neither gods nor men.

569. So much is clear. And yet there is more, which no man speaks, which all men now vaguely understand. Disquietude, absence of mind, is on every face; members whisper, uneasy come and go; the order of the day is evidently not the day's want. Till at length, from the outer gates, is heard a rustling and justling, shrill uproar and squabbling, muffled by walls, which testifies that the hour is come!

Rushing and crushing one hears now; then enter usher Maillard, with a deputation of fifteen muddy dripping women—having, by incredible industry, and aid of all the macers, persuaded the rest to wait out of doors. National assembly shall now, therefore, look its august task directly in the face: regenerative constitutionalism has an unregenerate sansculottism bodily in front of it, crying, "Bread! bread!"

570. Shifty Maillard, translating frenzy into articulation; repressive with the one hand, expostulative with the other, does his best; and really, though not bred to public speaking, manages rather well. In the present dreadful rarity of grains, a deputation of female citizens has, as the august assembly can discern, come out from Paris to petition. Plots of aristocrats are too evident in the matter: for example, one miller has been bribed "by a bank-note of 200 livres" not to grind, name unknown to the usher but fact provable, at least indubitable. Further, it seems, the national cockade has been trampled on; also, there are black cockades, or were. All which things will not an august national assembly, the hope of France, take into its wise immediate consideration?

571. And Monastére hunger, irrepressible, crying "Black cockades," crying "Bread, bread," adds, after such fashion, "Will it not? Yes, messieurs, if a deputation to his majesty, for the "acceptance puré and simple," seemed proper—how much more now, for the "afflicting situation of Paris," for the calming of this effervescence! President Mounier, with aspeedy deputation, among whom we notice the respectable figure of Doctor Guillotin, gets himself forward on march. Vice-president shall continue the order of the day; Usher Maillard shall stay by him to repress the women. It is four o'clock, of the miserablest afternoon, when Mounier steps out.

572. O experienced Mounier, what an afternoon, the last of thy political existence! Better had it been to "suddenly unwell," while it was yet time. For, behold, the esplanade, over all its spacious expanse, is covered with groups of squalid dripping women, of lank-haired male rascality, armed with axes, rusty pikes, old muskets, iron-shot clubs (batons ferrés, which end in knives or sword-blades, a kind of extempore bill-hook)—looking nothing but hungry revolt. The rain pours, gardes-du-corps go caracoling through the groups "amid hisses," irritating and agitating what is but dispersed here to re-unite there.

573. Innumerable squalid women beleaguer the president and deputation, insist on going with him; has not bis majesty himself, looking from the window, sent out to ask what we wanted? "Bread and speech with the king (Du pain, et parler au roi)," that was the answer. Twelve women are clamorously added to the deputation, and march with it across the esplanade, through dissipated groups, caracoling body-guards, and the pouring rain.

574. President Mounier, unexpectedly augmented by twelve women, copiously escorted by hunger and rascality, is himself mistaken for a group, himself and his women are dispersed by caracolers, rally again with difficulty among the mud. Finally the grates are opened; the deputation gets access, with the twelve women, too, in it, of which latter, five shall even see the face of his majesty. Let wet Mena-ism, in the best spirits it can, expect their return.

CHAPTER VII.

AT VERSAILLES.

575. But already Pallas Athene (in the shape of Demoiselle Théroigne) is busy with Flandre and the dismounted dragoons. She, and such women as are fittest, go through the ranks, speak with an earnest jocosity, clasp rough troopers to their patriot bosom, crush down spontoons and musketoons with soft arms; can a man, that were worthy of the name of man, attack famishing patriot women?

One reads that Théroigne had bags of money, which she distributed over Flandre—furnished by whom? Alas, with money-bags, one seldom sits on insurrectionary cannon. Calumnious royalism! Théroigne had only the limited earnings of her profession of unfortunate-female; money she had not, but brown locks, the figure of a heathen goddess, and an eloquent tongue and heart.

576. Meanwhile Saint-Antoine, in groups and troops, is continually arriving, wetted, sulky, with pikes and impromptu bill-books, driven thus far by popular fixed-idea. So many hirsute figures driven hither in that manner, figures that have come to do they know not what, figures that have come to see it done! Distinguished among all figures, who is this of gaunt stature, with leaden breast-plate, though a small one;* bushy in red grizzled locks, nay, with long tile-beard? It is Jourdan, unjust dealer in mules, a dealer no longer, but a painter's model, playing truant this day. From the necessities of art comes his long tile-beard; whence his leaden breastplate (unless, indeed, he were some hawker licensed by leaden badge) may have come, will perhaps remain forever a historical problem. Another Saul among the people we discern, "Père Adam (Father Adam)," as the groups name him, to us better known as bull-voiced Marquis Saint-Huruge, hero of the veto, a man that has had losses and deserved them. The tall marquis, emitted some days ago from limbo, looks peripatetically on this scene from under his umbrella, not without interest. All which persons and things hurled together as we see; Pallas Athene busy with Flandre, patriotic Versailles national guards short of ammunition, and deserted by D'Estaing, their colonel, and commanded by Lecointre, their major; then caracoling body-guards, sour, disspirited, with their buckskins wet; and finally this flowing sea of indignant squalor—may they not give rise to occurrences?

577. Behold, however, the twelve she-deputies return from the chateau. Without President Mounier, indeed, but radiant with joy, shouting, "Life to the king and his house." Apparently the news are good, mesdames? News of the best! Five of us were admitted to the internal splendors, to the royal presence. This slim damsels, "Louison Chabray, worker in sculpture, aged only seventeen," as being of the best looks and address, her we appointed speaker. On whom, and indeed on all of us, his majesty looked nothing but graciousness. Nay, when Louison, addressing him, was like to faint, he took her in his royal arms, and said gallantly, "It was well worth while (Elle en valut bien la peine)." Consider, O women, what a king! His words were of comfort, and that only; there shall be provision sent to Paris, if provision is in the world; grains shall circulate free as air, millers shall grind, or do worse, while their millstones endure, and nothing be left wrong which a restorer of French liberty can right.

578. Good news these, but, to wet Menads, all too incredible! There seems no proof then? Words of comfort—they are words only, which will feed nothing. O miserable people, betrayed by aristocrats, who corrupt the very messengers! In his royal arms, Mademoiselle Louison? In his arms? Thou shameless minx, worthy of a name—that shall he nameless! Yes, thy skin is soft; ours is rough with hardship, and well wetted, waiting here in the rain. No children hast thou hungry at home, only alabaster dolls that weep not! The traitress! To the lanterne! And so poor Louison Chabray, no assevertion or shrieks availing her, fair slim damsel, late in the arms of royalty, has a garter round her neck, and furibund amazons at each end, is about to perish so—when two body-guards gallop up, indignantly dissipating, and rescue her. The miscredited twelve hasten back to the château, for an “answer in writing.”

579. Nay, behold, a new flight of Menads, with “M. Brunout, Bastille volunteer,” as impressed-commandant at the head of it. These also will advance to the grate of the grand court, and see what is toward. Human patience, in wet buckskins, has its limits. Body-guard Lieutenant M. de Savonnières for one moment lets his temper, long provoked, long pent, give way. He not only dissipates these latter Menads, but carcasses and cuts, or indignantly flourishes at M. Brunout, the impressed-commandant, and, finding great relief in it, even chases him, Brunout flying nimbly though in a prone manner, and now with sword also drawn. At which sight of wrath and victory, two other body-guards (for wrath is contagious, and to pent body-guards is so solacing) do likewise give way, give chase with brandished saber, and in the air make horrid circles. So that poor Brunout has nothing for it but to retreat with accelerated nimbleness, through rank after rank, parriah-like, fencing as he flies; above all, shouting lustily, “On nous laisse assassiner (They are getting us assassinated)!”

580. Shameful! Three against one! Growls come from the Lecointrian ranks, bellowings—lastly shots.

Savonnières’s arm is raised to strike, the bullet of a Lecointrian musket shatters it, the brandished saber jingles down harmless. Brunout has escaped, this duel well ended; but the wild howl of war is everywhere beginning to pipe?

The amazons recoil, Saint-Antoine has its cannon pointed (full of grape-shot); thrice applies the lit flambeau, which thrice refuses to catch—the touchholes are so wetted; and voices cry, “Arrêtez, il n’est pas temps encore (Stop, it is not yet time)!” Messieurs of the Garde-du-Corps, ye had orders not to fire; nevertheless two of you limp dismounted, and one war-horse lies slain. Were it not well to draw back out of shot-range, finally to file off—into the interior? If in so filing off, the did a musketoon or two discharge itself at these armed shopkeepers, hooting and crowing, could man wonder? Dragged are your white cockades of an enormous size, would to heaven they were got exchanged for tricolor ones! Your buckskins are wet, your hearts heavy. Go, and return not!

581. The body-guards file off as we hint, giving and receiving shots, drawing no life-blood, leaving boundless indignation. Some three times in the thickening dusk, a glimpse of them is seen, at this or the other portal, saluted always with execrations, with the whew of lead. Let but a body-guard show face, he is hunted by rascality—for instance, poor “M. de Moncheton of the Scotch company,” owner of the slain war-horse—and has to be smuggled off by Versailles captains. Or rusty fire-locks belch after him; shivering a snuff—hat. In the end, by superior order, the body-guards, all but the few on immediate duty, disappear, or, as it were, abscond, and march, under cloud of night, to Rambouillet.*

582. We remark also that the Versailiese have now got ammunition; all afternoon, the official person could find none; till, in these so critical moments, a patriotic sub-lieutenant set a pistol to his ear, and would thank him to find some—which he thereupon succeeded in doing. Likewise that Flandre, disarmed by Pallas Athene, says openly it will not fight with citizens, and for tokens of peace has exchanged cartridges with the Versailiese.

583. Sansculottism is now among mere friends, and can “circulate freely,” indignant at body-guards—complaining also considerably of hunger.

CHAPTER VIII.

THE EQUAL DIET.

584. But why lingers Mounier, returns not with his deputation? It is six, it is seven o'clock, and still no Mounier, no acceptance pure and simple. And, behold the dripping Menads, not now in deputation but in mass, have penetrated into the assembly, to the shameflest interruption of public speaking and order of the day. Neither Maillard nor vice president can restrain them, except within wide limits; not ever, except for minutes, can the lion-voice of Mirabeau, though they applaud it; but ever and anon they break in upon the regeneration of France with cries of “Bread; not so much discoursing (Du pain; pas tant de longs discours)!” So insensible were these poor creatures to bursts of parliamentary eloquence!

585. One learns also that the royal carriages are getting yoked, as if for Metz. Carriages, royal or not, have verily showed themselves at the back gates. They even produced, or quoted, a written order from our Versailles municipality—which is a monarchic not a democratic one. However, Versailles patrols drove them in again, as the vigilant Lecointre had strictly charged them to do.

586. A busy man, truly, is Major Lecointre, in these hours. For Colonel d'Estaing loiters invisible in the Cel-de-Boeuf; invisible, or still more questionably invisible for instants; then also a too loyal municipality requires supervision; no order, civil or military, taken about any of these thousand things! Lecointre is at the Versailles town-hall, he is at the grate of the grand court, communing with Swiss and body-guards. He is in the ranks of Flandre; he is here, he is there; studious to prevent bloodshed, to prevent the royal family from flying to Metz, the Menads from plundering Versailles.

587. At the fall of night, we behold him advance to those armed groups of Saint-Antoine, hovering all too grim near the Salle des Menus. They receive him in a half-circle; twelve speakers behind cannon with lighted torches in hand, the cannon-mouths toward Lecointre—a picture for Salvator! He asks, in temperate but courageous language, What they, by this their journey to Versailles, do specially want? The twelve speakers reply, in few words inclusive of much, “Bread, and the end of these brabbles (Du pain, et la fin des affaires).” When the affairs will end, no Major Lecointre, nor no mortal, can say; but as to bread, he inquires, How many are you?—learns that they are six hundred, that a loaf each will suffice, and rides off to the municipality to get six hundred loaves.

588. Which loaves, however, a municipality of monarchic temper will not give. It will give two tons of rice rather—could you but know whether it should be boiled or raw. Nay, when this, too, is accepted, the municipals have disappeared—ducked under, as the six-and-twenty long-gowned of Paris did, and, leaving not the slightest vestige of rice, in the boiled or raw state, they there vanish from history!

Rice comes not; one’s hope of food is balked, even one’s hope of vengeance; is not M. de Moucheton of the Scotch company, as we said, deceitfully smuggled off? Failing all which, behold only M. de Moucheton’s slain war-horse, lying on the esplanade there! Saint-Antoine, balked esurient, pounces on the slain war-horse; flays it, roasts it with such fuel, of paling gates, portable timber, as can be come at, not without shouting; and, after the manner of ancient Greek heroes, they lifted their hands to the daintily readied repast, such as it might be. Other rascality prowls discursive, seeking what it may devour. Flandre will retire to its barracks; Lecointre also with his Versailles—all but the vigilant patrols, charged to be doubly vigilant.

589. So sink the shadows of night, blustering, rainy, and all paths grow dark. Strangest night ever seen in these regions—perhaps since the Bartholomew night, when Versailles, as Bessoniére writes of it, was a château. O for the lyre of some Orpheus, to constrain, with touch of melodious strings, these mad masses into order! For here all seems fallen asunder, in wide-yawning dislocation. The highest, as in down-rushing of a world, is come in contact with the lowest; the rascality of France beleaguering the royalty of France; “iron-shod batons” lifted round the diadem, not to guard it! With denunciations of bloodthirsty anti-national body-guards, are heard dark growlings against a queenly name.

590. The court sits tremulous, powerless; varies with the varying temper of the esplanade, with the varying color of the rumors from Paris. Thick-coming rumors, now of peace, now of war. Necker and all the ministers consult, with a blank issue. The Ceil-de-Boeuf is one tempest of whispers. We will fly to Metz: we will not fly. The royal carriages again attempt egress—though for trial merely; they are again driven in by Lecointre's patrols. In six hours nothing has been resolved on, not even the acceptance pure and simple.

591. In six hours? Alas, he who, in such circumstances, cannot resolve in six minutes may give up the enterprise; him fate has already resolved for. And Menadism, meanwhile, and sansculottism takes counsel with the national assembly; grows more and more tumultuous there. Mounier returns not, authority nowhere shows itself; the authority of France lies, for the present, with Lecointre and Usher Maillard. This, then, is the abomination of desolation; come suddenly, though long fore-shadowed as inevitable! For, to the blind, all things are sudden. Misery which, through long ages, had no spokesman, no helper, will now be its own helper and speak for itself. The dialect, one of the rudest, is, what it could be, this.

592. At eight o'clock there returns to our assembly, not the deputation, but Doctor Guillotin announcing that it will return; also that there is hope of the acceptance pure and simple. He himself has brought a royal letter, authorizing and commanding the freest "circulation of grains." Which royal letter Menadism with its whole heart applauds. Conformably to which the assembly forthwith passes a decree, also received with rapturous Menadic plaudits. Only could not an august assembly contrive farther to "fix the price of bread at eight sous the half-quarter, butchers' meat at six sous the pound," which seem fair rates? Such motion do "a multitude of men and women," irrepressible by Usher Maillard, now make—does an august assembly hear made. Usher Maillard himself is not always perfectly measured in speech, but if rebuked, he can justly excuse himself by the peculiarity of the circumstances.

593. But finally, this decree well passed, and the disorder continuing, and members melting away, and no President Mounier returning—what can the vice-president do but also melt away? The assembly melts; under such pressure, into deliquium; or, as it is officially called, adjourns. Maillard is dispatched to Paris, with the "decree concerning grains" in his pocket, he and some women; in carriages belonging to the king. Thitherward slim Louison Chabray has already set forth, with that "written answer" which the twelve she-deputies returned in to seek. Slim "neph, she has set forth, through the black muddy country; she has much to tell, her poor nerves so flurried, and travels, as indeed today on this road all persons do, with extreme slowness. President Mounier has not come, nor the acceptance pure and simple, though six hours with their events have come; though courier on courier reports that Lafayette is coming. Coming with war or with peace? It is time that the chateau also should determine on one thing or another; that the chateaus also should show itself alive, if it would continue living!

594. Victorious, joyful after such delay, Mounier

* "Moniteur" (in "Histoire Parlementaire," iii. 109).
does arrive at last, and the hard-earned acceptance with him; which now, alas, is of small value. Fancy Mounier's surprise to find his senate, whom he hoped to charm by the acceptance pure and simple, all gone, and in its stead a senate of Menads! For, as Erasmus's ape mimicked, say with wooden splint, Erasmus shaving, so do these amazons hold, in mock majesty, some confused parody of national assembly. They make motions, deliver speeches, pass enactments, productive at least of loud laughter. All galleries and benches are filled; a strong dame of the market is in Mounier's chair. Not without difficulty, Mounier, by aid of macers and persuasive speaking, makes his way to the female-president; the strong dame, before abdicating, signifies that, for one thing, she and, indeed, her whole senate male and female (for what was one roasted war-horse among so many?) are suffering very considerably from hunger.

595. Experienced Mounier, in these circumstances, takes a twofold resolution—to reconvoke his assembly members by sound of drum; also to procure a supply of food. Swift messengers fly to all bakers, cooks, pastry-cooks, vintners, restorers; drums beat, accompanied with shrill vocal proclamation through all streets. They come; the assembly members come; what is still better, the provisions come. On tray and barrow come these latter; loaves, wine, great store of sausages. The nourishing baskets circulate harmoniously along the benches; nor, according to the father of epics, did any soul lack a fair share of victual (Διαίτης, ἀργαός an equal diet), highly desirable at the moment."

596. Gradually some hundred or so of assembly members get edged in, Menadism making way a little, round Mounier's chair; listen to the acceptance pure and simple, and begin, what is the order of the night, "discussion of the penal code." All benches are crowded; in the dusty galleries, duster with unwashed heads, is a strange "coruscation"—of impromptu bill-hooks.† It is exactly five months this day since these same galleries were filled with high-plumed, jeweled beauty, raining bright influences; and now? To such length! have we got in regenerating France. Methinks the travail-throes are of the sharpest! Menadism will not be restrained from occasional remarks; asks, "What is the use of penal code? The thing we want is bread." Mirabeau turns round with lion-voiced rebuke; Menadism applauds him, but recommences.

597. Thus they, chewing tough sausages, discussing the penal code, make night hideous. What the issue will be? Lafayette, with his thirty thousand, must arrive first; him, who cannot now be distant, all men expect, as the messenger of destiny.

CHAPTER IX.

LAFAYETTE.

598. Toward midnight lights flare on the hill, Lafayette's lights! The roll of his drums comes up the Avenue de Versailles. With peace, or with war? Patience, friends! With neither, Lafayette is come, but not yet the catastrophe.

599. He has halted and harangued so often on the march; spent nine hours on four leagues of road. At Montreuil, close on Versailles, the whole host had to pause, and, with uplifted right hand, in the mark of night, to these pouring skies, swear solemnly to respect the king's dwelling; to be faithful to king and national assembly. Rage is driven down out of sight by the laggard march; the thirst of vengeance slaked in weariness and soaking clothes. Flandre is again drawn out under arms; but Flandre, grown so patriotic, now needs no "exterminating." The way-worn battalions halt in the avenue; they have, for the present, no wish so pressing as that of shelter and rest.

600. Anxious sits President Mounier; anxious the château. There is a message coming from the château, that M. Mounier would please to return thither with a fresh deputation, swiftly; and so at least unite our two anxieties. Anxious Mounier does of himself send, meanwhile, to apprise the general that his majesty has been so gracious as to grant us the acceptance pure and simple. The general, with a small advance column, makes answer in passing; speaks vaguely some smooth words to the national president—glances, only with the eye, at that so mixtiform national assembly; then fares forward toward the château. There are with him two Paris municipals; they were chosen from the three hundred for that errand. He gets admittance through the locked and padlocked grates, through sentries and ushers, to the royal halls.

601. The court, male, and female, crowds on his passage, to read their doom on his face, which exhibits, say historians, a mixture "of sorrow, of fervor and valor," singular to behold. The king, with monsieur, with ministers and marshals, is waiting to receive him; he "is come," in his high-flown, chivalrous way* to offer his head for the safety of his majesty's. The two municipals state the wish of Paris; four things, of quite pacific tenor. First, that the honor of guarding his sacred person be conferred on patriot national guards—say the Center Grenadiers, who, as Gardes Françaises, were wont to have that privilege. Second, that provisions be got, if possible. Third, that the prisons, all crowded with political delinquents may have judges sent them. Fourth, that it would please his majesty to come and live in Paris. To all which four wishes, except the fourth, his majesty answers readily, Yes; or indeed may almost say that he has already answered it. To the fourth he can answer only yes or no; would so gladly answer yes and no! But, in any case, are not their dispositions, thank heaven, so entirely pacific? There is time for deliberation. The brunt of the danger seems past!

* "Mémoire de M. le Comte de Lally-Tollendal" (Janvier 1790), pp. 161-165.

602. Lafayette and D'Estaing settle the watches; Center Grenadiers are to take the guard-room they of old occupied as Gardes Françaises—for, indeed, the Gardes-du-Corps, its late ill-advised occupants, are gone mostly to Rambouillet. That is the order of this night; sufficient for the night is the evil thereof. Whereupon Lafayette and the two munici­pals, with high-flown chivalry, take their leave.

603. So brief has the interview been, Mounier and his deputation were not yet got up. So brief and satisfactory. A stone is rolled from every heart. The fair palace dames publicly declare that this Lafayette, detestable though he be, is their savior for once. Even the ancient vinaigrous tantes admit it—the king's aunts, ancient graille and sisterhood, known to us of old. Queen Marie-Antoinette has been heard often say the like. She alone, among all women and all men, wore a face of courage, of lofty calmness and resolve, this day. She alone saw clearly what she meant to do; and Theresa's daughter dares do what she means were all France threatening her— abide where her children are, where her husband is.

604. Toward three in the morning all things are settled; the watches set, the Center Grenadiers put into their old guard-room and harangued: the Swiss and few remaining body-guards harangued. The way-worn Paris battalions, consigned to "the hospitality of Versailles," lie dormant in spare-beds, spare-barracks, coffee-houses, empty churches. A troop of them, on their way to the church of Saint-Louis, awoke poor Weber, dreaming troubles, in the Rue Sartory. Weber had his waistcoat-pocket full of balls all day, two hundred balls, and two pears of powder! For waistcoats were waistcoats then, and had flaps down to mid-thigh. So many balls he has had all day, but no opportunity of using them; he turns over now, execrating disloyal bandits, swears a prayer or two, and straight to sleep again.

605. Finally the national assembly is harangued, which, thereupon, on motion of Mirabeau, discontinues the penal code, and dismisses for the night. Monadism, sansculottism, has cowered into guard-houses, barracks of Flandre, to the light of cheerful fire; failing that, to churches, office-houses, sentry-boxes, wheresoever wretchedness can find a lair. The troublous day has brawled itself to rest, no lives yet lost but that of one war-horse. Insurrectionary chaos lies slumbering round the palace, like ocean round a diving-bell, no crevice yet disclosing itself.

606. Deep sleep has fallen promiscuously on the high and on the low, suspending most things, even wrath and famine. Darkness covers the earth. But, far on the north-east, Paris flings up her great yellow gleam, far into the wet black night. For all is illuminated there, as in the old July nights; the streets deserted, for alarm of war; the munici­pals all wakeful, patrols hailing, with their hoarse Who-goes. There, as we discover, our poor slim Louison Cha-bray, her poor nerves all fluttered, is arriving about this very hour. There Usher Maillard will arrive, about an hour hence, "toward four in the morning." They report, successively, to a wakeful Hotel-de-Ville what comfort they can; which again, with early dawn, large comfortable placards shall impart to all men.

607. Lafayette, in the Hotel de Noailles, not far from the château, having now finished haranguing, sits with his officers consulting; at five o'clock the unanimous best counsel is that a man so tost and toiled for twenty-four hours and more, fling himself on a bed, and seek some rest.

608. Thus, then, has ended the first act of the insurrection of women. How it will turn on the morrow? The morrow, as always, is with the Fates! But his majesty, one may hope, will consent to come honorably to Paris; at all events, he can visit Paris.

609. Ultra-national body-guards, here and elsewhere, must take the national oath; make reparation to the tri-color; Flandre will swear. There may be much swearing, much public speaking there will infallibly be; and so, with harangues and vows, may the matter in some handsome way wind itself up.

610. The dull dawn of a new morning, drizzly and chill, had but broken over Versailles when it pleased destiny that a body-guard should look out of window, on the right wing of the château, to see what prospect there was in heaven and in earth. Rascality, male and female, is prowling in view of him. His fasting stomach is, with good cause, sour; he perhaps cannot forbear a passing malison on them, lest of all can he forbear answering such.

611. Ill words breed worse, till the worst word come, and then the ill deed. Did the malevolent body-guard, getting (as was too inevitable) better malodiction than he gave, load his musketoon and threaten to fire; nay actually fire? Were wise who wist! It stands asserted, to us not credibly. But be this as it may, menaced rascality, in whinnying scorn, is shaking at all grates; the fastening of one (some write it was a chain merely) gives way; rascality is in the Grand Court, whinnying louder still.

612. The malevolent body-guard, more body-guards than he, do now give fire; a man's arm is rather of inflammable, self-igniting fluid—for example, "turpentine-and-phosphorus oil," fluid known to Spinola Santerre!
shattered. Lecointre will depose* that "the Sieur Cardine, a national guard without arms, was stabbed." But see, sure enough, poor Jerome l'Héritier, an unarmed national guard, he, too, "cabinet-maker, a saddler's son, of Paris," with the down of youthhood still on his chin—he reels death-striken, rushes to the pavement, scattering it with his blood and brains! Alloï! Wilder than Irisr wakes rises the howl, of pity, of infinite revenge. In few moments the grate of the inner and inmost court, which they name Court of Marble, this, too, is forced, or surprised, and bursts open; the Court of Marble, too, is overflowed; up the grand staircase, up all stairs and entrances, rushes the living deluge! Deshuttes and Varigny, the two sentry body-guards, are trodden down, or massacred with a hundred pikes. Women snatch their cutlasses, or any weapon, and storm in Menadic; other women lift the corpse of shot Jerome, lay it down on the marble steps; there shall the livid face and smashed head, dumb forever, speak.

613. Woe now to all body-guards; mercy is none for them! Miomandre de Sainte-Marie pleads with soft words on the grand staircase, "descending four steps," to the roaring tornado. His comrades snatch him up by the skirts and belts, literally from the jaws of destruction, and slam to their door. This also will stand few instants, the panels shivering like potsherds. Barricading serves not; fly fast, ye body-guards; rabid insurrection, like the hell-hound, chase uproaring at your heels!

614. The terror-struck body-guards fly, bolting and barricading; it follows. Whitherward? Through hall on hall; woe, now! toward the queen's suit of rooms, in the farthest room of which the queen is now fast asleep. Five sentinels rush through that long suit; they are in the anteroom knocking loud: "Save the queen!" Trembling women fall at their feet with tears; are answered, "Yes, we will die; save ye the queen!"

615. Tremble not, women, but haste; for, lo! another voice shouts far through the outermost door, "Save the queen!" and the door is shut. It is brave Miomandre's voice that shouts this second warning. He has stormed across imminent death to do it; fronts imminent death, having done it. Brave Tardivet du Repaire, bent on the same desperate service, was borne down with pikes; his comrades hardly snatched him in again alive. Miomandre and Tardivet—let the names of these two body-guards, as the names of brave men should, live long.

616. Trembling maids of honor, one of whom from afar caught glimpse of Miomandre as well as heard him, hastily wrap the queen—not in robes of state. She flies for her life across the Ceil-de-Boeuf, against the main door of which, too, insurrection batters. She is in the king's apartment, in the king's arms; she clasps her children amid a faithful few. The imperial-hearted bursts into mother's tears: "O my friends, save me and my children! (O mes amis, sauvez moi et mes enfants!” The battering of insurrectionary axes clangs audible across the Ceil-de-Beuf. What an hour!

617. Yes, friends, a hideous, fearful hour, shameful alike to governed and governor, wherein governed and governor ignominiously testify that their relation is at an end. Rage, which had brewed itself in 20,000 hearts for the last four-and-twenty hours, has taken fire: Jerome's brained corpse lies there as live coal. It is, as we said, the infinite element bursting in, wild-surgeing through all corridors and conduits.

618. Meanwhile the poor body-guards have got hunted mostly into the Ceil-de-Beuf. They may die there, at the king's threshold; they can do little to defend it. They are heaping tabourets (stools of honor-benches, and all movable against the door, at which the axe of insurrection thunders. But did brave Miomandre perish, then, at the queen's outer door? No; he was fractured, slashed, lacerated, left for dead; he has, nevertheless, crawled hither, and shall live, honored of loyal France. Remark, also, in flat contradiction to much which has been said and sung, that insurrection did not burst that door he had defended, but hurried elsewhither, seeking new body-guards.*

619. Poor body-guards, with their Thyestes opera-repast! Well for them that Insurrection has only pikes and axes; no right sieging-tools! It shakes and thunders. Must they all perish miserably, and royalty with them? Deshuttes and Varigny, massacred at the first in break, have been beheaded in

* Campan, ii. 76-87.

620. And louder and louder rages insurrection within, plundering if it cannot kill; louder and louder it thunders at the Ceil-de-Beuf; what can now hinder its bursting-in? On a sudden it ceases: the battering has ceased! Wild-rushing; the cries grow fainter; there is silence, or the tramp of regular steps; then a friendly knocking: “We are the Center Grenadiers, old Gardes Francaises: open to us, messieurs of the Garde-du-Corps; we have not forgotten how you saved us at Fontenoy!” The door is opened; enter Captain Gondran and the Center Grenadiers; there are military embracings; there is sudden deliverance from death into life.

621. Strange sons of Adam! It was to “exterminate” these Gardes-du-Corps that the Center Grenadiers left home; and now they have rushed to save them from extermination! The memory of common peril, of old help, melts the rough heart; bosom is clasped to bosom, not in war. The king shows himself one moment through the door of his apartment with: “Do not hurt my guards!” “Soysons freres! (Let us be brothers!)” cries Captain Gondran, and again dashes off, with leveled bayonets, to sweep the palace clear.

622. Now, too, Lafayette, suddenly roused, not...

from sleep (for his eyes had not yet closed), arrives, with passionate, popular eloquence, with prompt military word of command. National guards, suddenly roused by sound of trumpet and alarm drum, are all arriving. The death-melly ceases; the first sky-lambent blaze of insurrection is got damped down; it burns now, if unextinguished yet flameless, as charred coals do, and not inextinguishable. The king's apartments are safe. Ministers, officials, and even some loyal national deputies, are assembling round their majesties. The consternation will, with sobs and confusion, settle down gradually into plan and counsel, better or worse.

623. But glance now for a moment from the royal windows! A roaring sea of human heads, inundating both courts, billowing against all passages: Menadic women, infuriated men, mad with revenge, with love of mischief, love of plunder! Rascality has slipped its muzzle, and now bays, three-throated, like the dog of Erebus. Fourteen body-guards are wounded, two massacred, and, as we saw, beheaded; Jourand asking, "Was it worth while to come so far for two?" Hapless Desbuttes and Varigny! Their fate surely was sad. Whirled down so suddenly to the abyss, as men are, suddenly, by the wide thunder of the mountain avalanche, awakened not by them, awakened far off by others! When the château clock last struck they two were pacing languid, with poised musketoon, anxious mainly that the next hour would strike. It has struck, to them inaudible. Their trunks lie mangled, their heads parade, "on pikes twelve feet long," through the streets of Versailles, and shall, about noon, reach the barriers of Paris—a too ghastly contradiction to the large comfortable placards that have been posted there!

624. The other captive body-guard is still circling the corpse of Jerome amid Indian war-whooping, bloody tiele-heard, with tucked sleeves, brandishing his bloody axe, when Gondran and the grenadiers come in sight. "Comrades, will you see a man massacred in cold blood?" "Off, butchers!" answer they, and the poor body-guard is free. Busy runs Gondran, busy run guards and captains, scouring all corridors, dispersing rascality and robbery, sweeping the palace clear. The mangled carnage is removed, Jerome's body to the town-hall for inquest; the fire of insurrection gets damped, more and more, into measurable, manageable heat.

625. Transcendent things of all sorts, as in the general outbursts of multitudinous passion, are huddled together; the ludicrous, nay, the ridiculous, with the horrible. Far over the billowy sea of heads may be seen rascality caprioling on horses from the royal stud. The spoilers these; for patriotism is always infected so, with a proportion of mere thieves and scoundrels. Gondran snatched their prey from them in the château, whereupon they hurried to the stables and took horses there. But the generous Diomedes's steeds, according to Weber, disdained such scoundrel-burden, and, flinging up their royal heels, did soon project most of it, in parabolic curves, to a distance amid peals of laughter, and were caught. Mounted national guards secured the rest.

626. Now, too, is witnessed the touching last-flutter of etiquette, which sinks not here in the Cimmerian world-wreckage without a sign, as the house-cricket might still chirp in the pealing of a trumpet of doom.

"Monsieur," said some master of ceremonies (one hopes it might be De Brézé), as Lafayette, in these fearful moments, was rushing toward the inner royal apartments, "Monsieur, le roi vous accorde les grandes entrées (Monsieur, the king grants you the grand entrées)—not finding it convenient to refuse them."

CHAPTER XI.

FROM VERSAILLES.

627. However, the Paris national guard, wholly under arms, has cleared the palace, and even occupies the nearer external spaces, extruding miscellaneous patriotism, for most part, into the Grand Court, or even into the Forecourt.

628. The body-guards, you can observe, have now of a verity "hoisted the national cockade," for they step forward to the windows or balconies, hat aloft in hand, on each hat a huge tricolor, and fling over their bandoleers in sign of surrender, and shout, Vive la nation! To which how can the generous heart respond but with Vive le roi; vivent les Gardes-du-Corps? His majesty himself has appeared with Lafayette on the balcony, and again appears:

Vive le roi greets him from all throats, but also from some one throat is heard, "Le roi à Paris (The king to Paris)!

629. Her majesty, too, on demand, shows herself, though there is peril in it: she steps out on the balcony with her little boy and girl. "No children (Point d'enfans)!", cry the voices. She gently pushes back her children, and stands alone, her hands serenely crossed on her breast. "Should I die, she said, "I will do it." Such serenity of heroism has its effect. Lafayette, with ready wit, in his high-down, chivalrous way, takes that fair, queenly hand, and, reverently kneeling, kisses it; thereupon the people do shout, Vive la reine. Nevertheless poor Weber "saw" (or even thought he saw, for hardly the third part of poor Weber's experiences, in such hysterical days, will stand scrutiny) "one of these brigands level his musket at her majesty," with or without intention to shoot, for another of the brigands "angrily struck it down."

630. So that all, and the queen herself, nay, the very captain of the body-guards, have grown national! The very captain of the body-guards steps out now with Lafayette. On the hat of the repent-ant man is an enormous tricolor, huge as a soupplatter or sunflower, visible to the utmost Forecourt.
He takes the national oath with a loud voice, elevating his hat, at which sight all the army raise their bonnets on their bayonets, with shouts. Sweet is reconciliation to the heart of man. Lafayette has sworn Flandre; he swears the remaining body-guards down in the Marble Court; the people clasp them in their arms—O my brothers, why would ye force us to slay you? Behold, there is joy over you as over returning prodigal sons! The poor body-guards, now national and tricolor, exchange bonnets, exchange arms; there shall be peace and fraternity. And still "Vive le roi," and also "Le roi à Paris," not now from one throat, but from all throats as one, for it is the heart's wish of all mortals.

631. Yes, the king to Paris; what else? Ministers may consult and national deputies wag their heads, but there is now no other possibility. You have forced him to go willingly. "At one o'clock!" Lafayette gives audible assurance to that purpose, and universal insurrection, with immeasurable shout and a discharge of all the fire-arms, clear and rusty, great and small, that it has, returns him acceptance. What a sound; heard for leagues—a doom peal! That sound, too, rolls away into the silence of ages.

And the château of Versailles stands ever since vacant, hushed-still, its spacious courts grass-grown, responsive to the hoe of the weeder. Times and generations roll on in their confused gulf-current, and buildings, like builders, have their destiny.

632. Till one o'clock, then, there will be three parties, national assembly, national rascality, national royalty, all busy enough. Rascality rejoices; women trim themselves with tricolor. Nay, motherly Paris has sent her avengers sufficient "cart-loads of loaves," which are shouted over, which are gratefully consumed. The avengers, in return, are searching for grain-stores, loading them in fifty wagons, that so a national king, probable harbinger of all blessings, may be the evident bringer of plenty for one.

633. And thus has sansculottism made prisoner its king, revoking his parole. The monarchy has fallen, and not so much as honorably; no, ignominiously; with struggle, indeed, oft-repeated, but then with unwise struggle, wasting its strength in fits and paroxysms, at every new paroxysm foiled more pitifully than before. Thus Broglie's whip of grape-shot, which might have been something, has dwindled to the pot-valer of an opera repast and "O Richard, O mon roi!" Which again we shall see dwindle to a Favras conspiracy, a thing to be settled by the hanging of one chevalier.

634. Poor monarchy! But what save foulest defeat can await that man who wills and yet wills not? Apparently the king either has a right, assertible as such to the death, before God and man, or else he has no right. Apparently the one or the other, could he but know which! May heaven pity him! Were Louis wise he could this day abdicate. Is it not strange so few kings abdicate, and none yet heard of has been known to commit suicide? Fritz the First of Prussia alone tried it, and they cut the rope.

635. As for the national assembly, which decrees

FROM VERSAILLES.

Calumnious rumors, current long since, in loose vehicles (Edinburgh Review on "Memoires de Bastille," for example), concerning Friedrich Wilhelm and his ways, then so mysterious and miraculous to many—not the least truth in it! (Note of 1-65)
this morning that it "is inseparable from his majesty" and will follow him to Paris, there may one thing be noted—its extreme want of bodily health. After the 14th of July there was a certain sickness observable among honorable members—so many demanding passports on account of infirm health. But now, for these following days, there is a perfect murmur, President Monnier, Lally Tollendal, Clermont Tonnere, and all constitutional two-chamber royalists needing change of air, as most no-chamber royalists had formerly done.

636. For, in truth, it is the second emigration this, that has now come, most extensive among commons deputies, noblesse, clergy, so that "to Switzerland alone there go sixty thousand." They will return in the day of accounts! Yes, and have hot welcome. But emigration on emigration is the peculiarity of France. One emigration follows another, grounded on reasonable fear, unreasonable hope, largely also, on childish pet. The high-flyers have gone first, now the lower flyers, and ever the lower will go, down to the crawlers. Whereby, however, cannot our national assembly so much the more commodiously make the constitution, your two-chamber Anglicanics being all safe, distant on foreign shores? Abbé Maury is seized and sent back again: he, tough as tanned leather, with eloquent Captain Cazalès and some others, will stand it out for another year.

637. But here, meanwhile, the question arises. Was Philippe D'Orléans seen, this day, "in the Bois de Boulogne, in gray surtout," waiting under the wet, serene foliage what the day might bring forth? Alas! yes the eidolon of him was—in Weber's and other such brains. The Châtelet shall make large inquisition into the matter, examining a hundred and seventy witnesses, and Deputy Chabroud publish his report, but disclose nothing further.* What, then, has caused these two unparalleled October days? For, surely, such dramatic exhibition never yet enacted itself without dramatist and machinist. Wooden Punch emerges not, with his domestic sorrow, into the light of day, unless the wire be pulled; how can human mobs? Was it not D'Orléans, then, and Laclès, Marquis Sillery, Mirabeau, and the sons of confusion, hoping to drive the king to Metz, and gather the spoil? Nay, was it not, quite contrariwise, the Célte-de-Bœuf, body-guard Colonel de Guiche, Minister Saint-Priest, and high-flying loyalists, hoping, also, to drive him to Metz, and try it by the sword of civil war? Good Marquis Toulon-geon, the historian and deputy, feels constrained to admit that it was both.

638. Alas! my friends, credulous incredulity is a strange matter. But when a whole nation is smitten with suspicion, and sees a dramatic miracle in the very operation of the gastric juices, what help is there? Such nation is already a mere hypochondriac bundle of diseases, as good as changed into glass; atrabilious, decadent, and will suffer crises. Is not suspicion itself the one thing to be suspected, as Montaigne feared only fear?

639. Now, however, the short hour has struck. His majesty is in his carriage, with his queen, sister Elizabeth, and two royal children. Not for another hour can the infinite procession get marshaled and under way. The weather is dim, drizzling; the mind confused, the noise great.

640. Professional marches not a few our world has seen—Roman triumphs and ovations, Cæsarian cymbal-beatings, Royal progresses, Irish funerals—but this of the French monarchy marching to its bed remained to be seen. Miles long, and of breadth losing itself in vagueness, for all the neighboring country crowds to see. Slow, stagnating along, like shoreless lake, yet with a noise like Niagara, like Babel and bedlam. A splashing and a trampling, a hurrahing, uproaring, musket-volleying—the truest segment of chaos seen in these latter ages! Till slowly it disembogens itself, in the thickening dusk, into expectant Paris, through a double row of faces all the way from Passy to the Hotel-de-Ville.

641. Consider this: Vanguard of national troops, with trains of artillery, of pikemen and pikewomen, mounted on cannons, on carts, hackney-coaches, or on foot, tripudiating, in tricolor ribbons from head to heel; loaves stuck on the points of bayonets, green boughs stuck in gun-barrels.* Next, as main-march, "fifty cart-loads of corn," which have been lent, for peace, from the stores of Versailles. Behind which follow stragglers of the Garde-du-Corps, all humiliated, in grenadier bonnets. Close on these comes the royal carriage, come royal carriages, for there are a hundred national deputies, too, among whom sits Mirabeau—his remarks not given. Then, finally, pell-mell, as rear-guard, Fandre, Swiss, Hundred Swiss, other body-guards, brigands, whosoever cannot get before. Between and among all which masses, flows, without limit, Saint-Antoine and the Menadic cohort. Menadic especially about the royal carriage, tripudiating there, covered with tricolor, singing "allusive songs," pointing with one hand to the royal carriage, which the allusions hit, and pointing to the provision-wagons with the other hand, and these words: "Courage, friends! We shall not want bread now; we are bringing you the baker, the bakeress, and the baker's boy (le boulanger, la boulangère, et le petit mitron)."

642. The wet day draggles the tricolor, but the joy is unextinguishable. Is not all well now? "Ah, madame, notre bonne reine," said some of these strong-women some days hence, "Ah, madame, our good queen, don't be a traitor any more (ne soyez plus trairre), and we will all love you!" Poor Weber went splashing along, close by the royal carriage, with the tear in his eye: "Their majesties did me the honor," or I thought they did it, "to testify from time to time, by shrugging of their shoulders, by looks directed to heaven, the emotions they felt."

* Toulongeon, i. 184-81; "Deux Amis," iii. 9; etc., etc.
THE INSURRECTION OF WOMEN.

Thus, like frail cockle, floats the royal life-boat, helmsless, on black deluges of rascality.

643. Mercier, in his loose way, estimates the procession and assistants at 200,000. He says it was one boundless, inarticulate ha-ha—trancendent world-laughter, comparable to the saturnalia of the ancients. Why not? Here, too, as we said, is human nature once more human, shudder at it whose is of shuddering humor—yet, behold, it is human. It has "swallowed all formulae;" it tripudiates even so. For which reason they that collect vases and antiques, with figures of dancing bacchantes "in wild and all but impossible positions," may look with some interest on it.

644. Thus, however, has the slow-moving chaos, or modern saturnalia of the ancients, reached the barrier, and must halt, to be harangued by Mayor Bailly. Thereafter it has to lumber along, between the double row of faces, in the transcendent, heaven-lashing ha-ha, two hours longer, toward the Hotel-de-Ville. Then, again, to be harangued there by several persons, by Moreau de Saint-Méry, among others—Moreau of the three thousand orders, now national deputy for St. Domingo. To all which poor Louis, "who seemed to experience a slight emotion" on entering this town-hall, can answer only that he "comes with pleasure, with confidence, among his people." Mayor Bailly, in reporting it, forgets "confidence," and the poor queen says eagerly, "Add, with confidence." "Messieurs," rejoins Mayor Bailly, "you are happier than if I had not forgotten."

FROM VERSAILLES.

645. Finally, the king is shown on an upper balcony, by torch-light, with a huge tricolor in his hat, "and all the people," says Weber, "grasped one another's hand," thinking now, surely, the new era was born. Hardly till eleven at night can royalty get to its vacant, long-deserted palace of the Tuileries, to lodge there, somewhat in strolling-player fashion. It is Tuesday, the 6th of October, 1789.

646. Poor Louis has two other Paris processions to make, one ludicrous-ignominious like this, the other not ludicrous nor ignominious, but serious, nay, sublime.
647. The victim having once got his stroke-of-grace, the catastrophe can be considered as almost come. There is small interest now in watching his long low moans: notable only are his sharper agonies, what convulsive struggle he may make to cast the torture off from him; and then finally the last departure of life itself, and how he lies extinct and ended, either wrapt like Caesar in decorous mantle-folds, or unseemly sunk together, like one that had not the force even to die.

648. Was French Royalty, when wrenched forth from its tapestries in that fashion, on that 6th of October, 1789, such a victim? Universal France, and especially the provinces, are the Royal Proclamation to all the Provinces, answers anxiously, No. Nevertheless one may fear the worst. Royalty was beforehand so decrepit, moribund, there is little life in it to heal an injury. How much of its strength, which was of the imagination merely, has fled; Rascality having looked plainly in the King's face, and not died! When the assembled crows can pluck up their scarecrow, and say to it, Here shalt thou stand and not there; and can treat with it, and make it, from an infinite, a quite finite Constitutional scarecrow,—what is to be looked for? Not in the finite Constitutional scarecrow, but in what still unmeasured, infinite-seeming force may rally round it, is there thenceforth any hope. For it is most true that all available Authority is mystic in its conditions, and comes "by the grace of God."

649. Cheerfuller than watching the death-struggles of Royalism will it be to watch the growth and gambolings of Sansculottism; for, in human things, especially in human society, all death is but a death-birth: thus if the scepter is departing from Louis, it is only that, in other forms, other scepters, were it even pike-scepters, may bear sway. In a prurient element, rich with nutritive influences, we shall find that Sansculottism grows lustily, and even frisks in not ungraceful sport: as indeed most young creatures are sportful; nay, may it not be noted further, that as the grown cat, and cat species generally, is the cruellest thing known, so the merriest is precisely the kitten, or growing cat?
truckle-beds on the morrow of that mad day: fancy the Municipal inquiry, "How would your Majesty please to lodge?"—and then that the King's rough answer, "Each man lodge as he can, I am well enough," is congeed and bowed away, in expressive grins by the Town-hall Functionaries, with obsequious upholsterers at their back; and how the Château of the Tuileries is repainted, regarnished into a golden Royal Residence; and Lafayette with his blue National Guards lies encompassing it, as blue Neptune (in the language of poets) does an island, wooingly. Thither may the wrecks of rehabilitated Loyalty gather, if it will become Constitutional; for Constitutionalism thinks no evil; Sansculottism itself rejoices in the King's countenance. The rubbish of a Mendie Insurrection, as in this ever-kindly world all rubbish can and must be, is swept aside and so again, on clear arena, and under new conditions, with something even of a new stateliness, we begin a new course of action.

651. Arthur Young has witnessed the strangest scene. Majesty walking unattended in the Tuileries Gardens; and miscellaneous tricolor crowds, who cheer it, and reverently make way for it; the Queen commands at lowest respectful silence, regretful avoidance. Simple ducks, in those royal waters, quackle for crumbs from young royal fingers: the little Dauphin has a little railed garden, where he is seen delving, with ruddy cheeks and flaxen curled hair; also a little hut to put his tools in, and screen himself against showers. What peaceable simplicity! Is it peace of a Father restored to his children? Or of a Task-master who has lost his whip? Lafayette and the Municipality and universal Constitutionism assert the former, and do what is in them to realize it. Such Patriotism as snarls dangerously and shows teeth, Patroliotism shall suppress; or far better, Loyalty shall soothe down the angry hair of it, by gentle patters; and, most effectual of all, by fuller diet. Yes, not only shall Paris be fed, but the King's hand be seen in that work. The household goods of the Poor shall, up to a certain amount, by royal bounty, be disengaged from pawn, and that insatiable Mont de Piété shall disgorge; rides in the city with their Vive-le-Roi need not fail; and so, by substance and show, shall Loyalty, if man's art can popularize it, be popularized.

652. Or, alas, is it neither restored Father nor dis-whipped Task-master that walks there; but an anomalous complex of both these, and of innumerable other heterogeneities: reducible to no rubric, if not this newly-devised one: King Louis, Restorer of French Liberty. Man indeed, and King Louis like other men, lives in this world to make rule out of the ruleless; by his living energy, he shall force the absurd itself to become less absurd. But then if there be no living energy; living passively only? King Serpent, hurled into its unexpected watery dominion, did at least bite, and assert credibly that he was there: but for poor King Log, tumbled hither and... thither as thousandfold chance and other will than his might direct, how happy for him that he was indeed wooden; and, doing nothing, could also see and suffer nothing. It is a distracted business.

653. For his French Majesty, meanwhile, one of the worst things is, that he can get no hunting.
Alas, no hunting henceforth; only a fatal being-hunted! Scarcely, in the next June weeks, shall he taste again the joys of the game-destroyer, in next June, and never more. He sends for his smith-tools; gives in the course of the day, official or ceremonial business being ended, "a few strokes of the file (quelques coups de lime)." * Innocent brother mortal, why was thou not an obscure substantial maker of locks; but doomed in that other far-seen craft, to be a maker only of world-follies, unrealities; things self-destructive, which no mortal hammering could rivet into coherence!

654. Poor Louis is not without insight, nor even without the elements of will; some sharpeness of temper, spurring at times from a stagnating character. If harmless inertness could save him, it were well; but he will slumber and painfully dream, and to do aught is not given him. Royalist Antiquarians still show the rooms where Majesty and suit, in these extraordinary circumstances, had their lodging.
Here sat the Queen; reading,—for she had her library brought hither, though the King refused his; taking vehement counsel of the vehement uncounselled; sorrowing over altered times; yet with sure hope of better: in her young rosé Boy has she not the living emblem of hope? It is a murky, working sky; yet with golden gleams—of dawn, or of deeper meteoric night? Here again this chamber, on the other side of the main entrance, was the King's; here his Majesty breakfasted, and did official work; here daily after breakfast he received the Queen; sometimes in pathetic friendliness; sometimes in human sulkiness,

for flesh is weak; and when questioned about business, would answer: "Madame, your business is with the children." Nay, Sire, were it not better you, your Majesty's self, took the children? So asks impartial History; scornful that the thicker vessel was not also the stronger; pity-struck for the porcelain-clay of humanity rather than for the tile-clay,
—though indeed both were broken!
655. So, however, in this Medicean Tuileries, shall the French King and Queen now sit for one-and-forty months; and see a wild-fermenting France work out its own destiny, and theirs. Months, bleak, ungenial, of rapid vicissitude; yet with a mild pale splendor, here and there: as of an April that were leading to leafiest Summer as of an October that led only to everlasting Frost. Medicean Tuileries, how changed since it was a peaceful Tile-field! Or is the ground itself fate-stricken, accursed; an Atreus's Palace; for that Louvre window is still nigh, out of which a Capet, whipt of the Furies, fired his signal of the Saint Bartholomew! Dark is the way of the Eternal as mirrored in this world of time: God's way is in the sea, and His path in the great deep.

IN THE SALLE DE MANÈGE.

656. To believing Patriots, however, it is now clear that the Constitution will march, — had it once legs to stand on. Quick, then, ye Patriots, be-stir yourselves, and make it; shape legs for it! In the Archevêché, or Archbishop's Palace, his Grace himself having fled; and afterward in the Riding-hall, named Manège, close on the Tuileries; there does a National Assembly apply itself to the miraculous work. Successfully, had there been any heaven-scaling Prometheus among them; not successfully, since there was none! There, in noisy debate, for the sessions are occasionally "scandalous," and as many as three speakers have been seen in the Tribune at once,—let us continue to fancy it wearing the slow months.

657. Tough, dogmatic, long of wind, is Abbé Maury; Ciceronian pathetic is Carzalès. Keen-trenchant, on the other side, glitters a young Barnave; abhorrent of sophistry; shearing, like keen Damascene saber, all sophistry asunder,—reckless what else he shear with it. Simple seemest thou, O solid Dutch-built Pétion; if solid, surely dull. Nor life-giving is that tone of thine, livelier polemical Rabaut. With ineffable serenity sniffs great Sieyes, aloof, alone; his Constitution ye may babble over, ye may mar, but can by no possibility mend: is not Polity a science he has exhausted? Cool, slow, two military Lametha are visible, with their quality sneer, or demi-sneer; they shall gallantly refund their Mother's Pension, when the Red Book is produced; gallantly be wounded in duels. A Marquis Toulounge, whose Pen we yet thank, sits there; in stoical meditative humor, oftenest silent, accepts what Destiny will send. Thoureii and Parliamentary Duport produce mountains of Reformed Law; liberal, Anglomaniac; available and unavailable. Mortals rise and fall. Shall goose Gobel, for example,—or Gobel, for he is of Strasburg German breed,—be a Constitutional Archbishop?

658. Alone of all men there, Mirabeau may begin to discern clearly whither all this is tending. Patriotism, accordingly, regrets that his zeal seems to be getting cool. In that famed Pentecost-Night of the 4th of August, when new Faith rose suddenly into miraculous fire, and old Feudality was burnt up, men remarked that Mirabeau took no hand in it; that, in fact, he luckily happened to be absent. But did he not defend the Veto, nay Veto Absolu; and tell vehement Barnave that 600 irresponsible senators would make of all tyrannies the insupportablest? Again, how anxious was he that the King's Ministers should have seat and voice in the National Assembly,—doubtless with an eye to being Minister himself! Whereupon the National Assembly decides, what is very momentous, that no Deputy shall be Minister; he, in his haughty stormful manner, advising us to make it, "no Deputy called Mirabeau..."
A man of perhaps inveterate Feudalisms; of stratagems; too often visible leanings toward the Royalist side: a man suspect; whom Patriotism will unmask! Thus, in these June days, when the question, Who shall have right to declare war? comes on, you hear hoarse Hawkers sound dolefully through the streets, "Grand Treason of Count Mirabeau, price only one sou;"—because he pleads that it shall be not the Assembly, but the King! Pleads; nay prevails; for in spite of the hoarse Hawkers, and an endless Populace raised by them to the pitch even of "Lanterne," he mounts the Tribune next day; grim resolute; murmuring aside to his friends that speak of danger: "I know it; I must come hence either in triumph, or else torn in fragments;" and it was in triumph that he came.

659. A man stout of heart; whose popularity is not of the populace, "pas populaire," whom no clamor of unwashed mobs without doors, or of washed mobs within, can scare from his way! Dumont remembers hearing him deliver a Report on Marseilles; "every word was interrupted on the part of the "Côté Droit by abusive epithets; calumniator, liar, assassin, scoundrel (scélérat): Mirabeau pauses a moment, and, in a honeyed tone, addressing the most furious, says: "I wait, Messieurs, till these amenities be exhausted." A man enigmatical, difficult to unmask! For example, whence comes his money? Can the profit of a Newspaper, sorely eaten into by Dame Le Jay; can this, and the eighteen francs a-day your National Deputy has, be supposed equal to this expenditure? House in the Chaussée d'Antin; Country-house at Argenteuil; splendors, sumptuositites, orgies;—living as if he had a mint! All saloons, barred against Adventurer Mirabeau, are flung wide-open to King Mirabeau, the cynosure of Europe, whom female France flutters to behold,—though the Man Mirabeau is one and the same. As for money, one may conjecture that Royalism furnishes it; which if Royalism do, will not the same be welcome, as money always is to him?

660. "Sold," whatever Patriotism thinks, he cannot readily be: the spiritual fire which is in that man; which sliding through such confusions is nevertheless Conviction, and makes him strong; and without which he had no strength,—is not buyable nor salable: in such transference of barrier, it would vanish and not be. Perhaps "paid and not sold (payé pas vendu):" as poor Rivarol, in the unhappier converse way, calls himself "sold and not paid." A man traveling, comet-like, in splendor and noblesse; wild way; whose telescopic Patriotism may long watch, but, without higher mathematics, will not make out. A questionable, most blamable man; yet to us the far notablest of all. With rich munificence, as we often say, in a most blinkard, bespectacled, logic-chopping generation, Nature has gifted this man with an eye. Welcome is his word, there where he speaks and works; and growing ever wel-comer; for it alone goes to the heart of the business: logical cobwebbery shrinks itself together; and thou seest a thing, how it is, how it may be worked with.

631. Unhappily our National Assembly has much to do: a France to regenerate; and France is short of so many requisites, short even of cash. These same Finances give trouble enough; no choking of the Deficit; which gapes ever, Give, give! To appease the Deficit we venture on a hazardous step, sale of the Clergy’s Lands and superfluous Edifices; most hazardous. Nay, give the sale, who is to buy them, ready-money having fled? Wherefore, on the 19th day of December, a paper-money of “Assignats,” of Bonds secured, or assigned, on that Clerico-National Property, and unquestionable at least in payment of that—is decreed: the first of a long series of like financial performances, which shall astonish mankind. So that now, while old rags last, there shall be no lack of circulating medium: whether of commodities to circulate thereon, is another question. But, after all, does not this Assignat business speak volumes for modern science? Bankruptcy, we may say, was come, as the end of all Delusions needs must come; yet how gently, in softening diffusion, in mild succession, was it hereby made to fall;—like no all-destroying avalanche; like gentle showers of a powdery impalpable snow, shower after shower, till all was indeed buried, and yet little was destroyed that could not be replaced, be dispensed with! To such length has modern machinery reached. Bankruptcy, we said, was great; but indeed Money itself is a standing miracle.

632. On the whole, it is a matter of endless difficulty, that of the Clergy. Clerical property may be made the Nation’s, and the Clergy hired servants of the State; but if so, is it not an altered Church? Adjustment enough, of the most confused sort, has become unavoidable. Old landmarks, in any sense, avail not in a new France. Nay literally, the very Ground is new divided; your old particolored Provinces become new uniform Departments Eighty-three in number;—whereby, as in some sudden shifting of the Earth’s axis, no mortal knows his new latitude at once. The Twelve old Parlements too, what is to be done with them? The old Parlements are declared to be all “in permanent vacation,” till once the new equal-justice, of Departmental Courts, National Appeal-Court, of elective Justices, Justices of Peace, and other Thouret-and-Duport apparatus be got ready. They have to sit there, these old Parlements, uneasily waiting; as it were, with the rope round their neck; crying as they can, Is there none to deliver us? But happily the answer being, None, none, they are a manageable class, these Parlements. They can be bullied, even, into silence; the Paris Parliament, wiser than most, has never whimpered. They will and must sit there, in such vacation as is fit; their Chamber of Vacation distributes in the interim what little justice is going. With the rope round their neck, their destiny may be succinct! On the 13th of November, 1790, Mayor Bailly shall walk to the Palais de Justice, few even heeding him; and with municipal seal stamp and a little hot wax, seal up the Parliamentary Paper-rooms—and the dread Parlement of Paris pass away, into Chaos, gently as does a dream! So shall the Parlements perish, succinctly, and innumerable eyes be dry.

663. Not so the Clergy. For, granting even that Religion were dead; that it had died, half-centuries ago, with inutterable Dubois; or emigrated lately to Alsace, with Necklace-Cardinal Rohan; or that it now walked as goblin revenant, with Bishop Talleyrand of Autun; yet does not the Shadow of Religion, the Cant of Religion, still linger? The Clergy have means and material: means, of number, organization, social weight; a material, at lowest, of public ignorance, known to be the mother of devotion. May withal, is it incredible that there might, m simple hearts, latent here and there like gold-grams in the mud-beach, still dwell some real Faith in God, or so singular and tenacious a sort that even a Maury or a Talleyrand could still be the symbol for it?—Enough, the Clergy has strength, the Clergy has craft and indignation. It is a most fatal business this of the Clergy. A weltering hydra-coil, which the National Assembly has stirred up about its ears; hissing, stinging; which cannot be appeased, alive; which cannot be trampled dead! Fatal, from first to last! Scarcely after fifteen months’ debating, can a Civil Constitution of the Clergy be so much as got to paper; and then for getting it into reality! Alas, such Civil Constitution is but an agreement to disagree. It divides France from end to end, with a new split, infinitely complicating all the othersplits:—Catholicism, what of it there is left, with the Cant of Catholicism, raging on the one side, and skeptic Heathenism on the other; both, by contradiction, waxing fanatic. What endless jarring, of Refractory hated Priests, and Constitutional despised ones; of tender consciences, like the King’s, and consciences hot-seared, like certain of his People’s: the whole to end in Feasts of Reason and a War of La Vendée! So deep-seated is Religion in the heart of man, and holds of all infinite passions. If the dead echo of it still did so much, what could not the living voice of it once do?

664. Finance and Constitution, Law and Gospel: this surely were work enough; yet this is not all. In fact, the Ministry, and Necker himself, whom a brass inscription, “fastened by the people over his door-lintel,” testifies to be the “Ministre adoré,” are dwindling into clearer and clearer nullity. Execution or legislation, arrangement or detail, from their nerveless fingers all drops undone; all lights at last on the toiled shoulders of an august Representative Body. Heavy-laden National Assembly! It has to hear of innumerable fresh revolts, Brigand expeditions; of Châteaus in the West, especially of Charter-Chests, Chartiers, set on fire; for there too the overloaded Ass frightfully recalcitrates. Of Cities in the South full of heats and jealousies; which will end in crossed sabers, Marseilles against Toulon, and Carpentras beleaguered by Avignon;—of so much Royal-ist collision in a career of Freedom; nay of Patriot collision, which a mere difference of velocity will bring about! Of a Jourdan Coup-tété, who has skulked thitherward, to those southern regions, from the claws of the Châtelet; and will raise whole scoundrel regiments.

663. Also it has to hear of Royalist Camp of Jalés: Jalés mountain-girdled Plain, amid the rocks of the Cevennes; whence Royalism, as is feared and hoped, may dash down like a mountain deluge, and submerge France! A singular thing this Camp of Jalés; existing mostly on paper. For the Soldiers at Jalés, being peasants or National Guards, were in heart sworn Sansculottes; and all that the Royalist Captains could do, was, with false words, to keep them, or rather keep the report of them, drawn up there, visible to all imaginations, for a terror and a sign,—if peradventure France might be reconquered by theatrical machinery, by the picture of a Royalist Army done to the life! Not till the third summer was this portent, burning out by fits and then fading, got finally extinguished; was the old Castle of Jalés, no Camp being visible to the bodily eye, got blown asunder by some National Guards.

666. Also it has to hear not only of Brissot and his Friends of the Blacks, but by and by of a whole St. Domingo blazing skyward; blazing in literal fire, and in far worse metaphorical; beaconing the nightly main. Also of the shipping interest, and the landed interest, and all manner of interests, reduced to distress. Of Industry everywhere manacled, bewildered; and only Rebellion thriving. Of sub-officers, soldiers and sailors in mutiny by land and water. Of soldiers, at Nancy, as we shall see, needing to be cannonaded by a brave Bouillé. Of sailors, nay the very galley-slaves, at Brest, needing also to be cannonaded, but with no Bouillé to do it. For indeed, to say it in a word, in those days there was no King in Israel, and every man did that which was right in his own eyes.

667. Such things has an august National Assembly, to hear of, as it goes on regenerating France. Sad and stern: but what remedy? Get the Constitution ready; and all men will swear to it: for do not "Addresses of adhesion" arrive by the cart-load? In this manner, by Heaven's blessing, and a Constitution got ready, shall the bottomless fire-gulf be vanquished; and Order will wed Freedom and live with her there,—till it grow too hot for them. O Coté Gauche, worthy are ye, as the adhesive Addresses generally say, to "fix the regards of the Universe;" the regards of this one poor Planet, at lowest!

668. Nay, it must be owned, the Coté Droit makes a still madder figure. An irrational generation; irrational, imbecile, and with the vehement obstinacy characteristic of that: a generation which will not learn. Falling Bastilles, Insurrections of Women, thousands of smoking Manor-houses, a country bristling with no crop but that of Sansculottic steel; these were tolerably didactic lessons; but then they have not taught. There are still men, of whom it was of old written, Bray them in a mortar! Or, in milder language, They have wedded their delusions: fire nor steel, nor any sharpness of Experience, shall sever the bond; till death do us part! On such may the Heavens have mercy; for the Earth, with her rigorous Necessity, will have none.

669. Admit, at the same time, that it was most natural. Man lives by Hope: Pandora, when her box of gods'-gifts flew all out, and became gods'-curses, still retained hope. How shall an irrational mortal, when his high-place is never so evidently pulled down, and he, being irrational, is left resourceless, part with the belief that it will be rebuilt? It would make all so straight again; it seems so unspakably desirable; so reasonable,—would you but look at it aright! For, must not the thing which was continue to be; or else the solid World dissolve? Yes, persist, O infatuated Sansculotte of France! Revolt against constituted Authorities; hunt out your rightful Seigneurs, who at bottom so loved you, and readily shed their blood for you,—in country's battles as at Rossbach and elsewhere; and, even in preserving game, were preserving you, could ye but have understood it; hunt them out, as if they were wild wolves; set fire to their Chateaus and Chariters as to wolf-dens; and what then? Why, then turn every man his hand against his fellow! In confusion, famine, desolation, regret the days that are gone; rueful recall them, recall us with them. To repentant prayers we will not be deaf.

670. So, with dimmer or clearer consciousness, must the Right Side reason and act. An inevitable position perhaps; but a most false one for them. Evil, be thou or good: this henceforth must virtually be their prayer. The fiercer the effervescence grows, the sooner will it pass; for, after all, it is but some mad effervescence; the World is solid, and cannot dissolve.

671. For the rest, if they have any positive industry, it is that of plots, and back-stairs conclaves. Plots which cannot be executed; which are mostly theoretic on their part,—for which nevertheless this and the other practical Sieur Angeard, Sieur Mulebois, Sieur Bonne Sauvardin, gets into trouble, gets imprisoned, and escapes with difficulty. Nay there is a poor practical Chevalier Favras, who, not without some passing reflex on Monsieur himself, gets hanged for them, amid loud uproar of the world. Poor Favras, he keeps dictating his last will * at the Hotel-de-Ville, through the whole remainder of the day," a weary February day; offers to reveal secrets, if they will save him; handsomely declines since they will not; then dies, in the flare of torchlight, with politest composure: remarking, rather than exclaiming, with outspread hands: "People, I die innocent; pray for me."* Poor Favras;—type of so much that has prowled indefatigable over France, in days now ending; and, in freer field, might have carmed instead of prowling,—to thee it is no theory!

672. In the Senate-house again, the attitude of the Right Side is that of calm unbeliev. Let an august National Assembly make a Fourth-of-August Abolition of Feudality; declare the Clergy State-servants, who shall have wages; vote Suspensive Vetoes, new Law-Courts; vote or decree what contested thing it will; have it responded to from the four corners of France, nay get King's Sanction, and what other Acceptance were conceivable,—the Right Side, as we find, persists, with imperturbablest tenacity, in considering, and ever and anon shows that it still considers, all these so-called Decrees as mere temporary whims, which indeed stand on paper, but in practice and fact are not, and cannot be. Figure the brass head of an Abbé Maury flooding forth jesuitic eloquence in this strain; dusky D'Espréménil, Barrel Mirabeau (probably in liquor), and enough of others, cheering him from the Right; and, for example, with what visage a sea-green Robespierre eyes him from the Left. And how Sieyes ineffably sniffs on him, or does not deign to sniff; and how the Galleries groan in spirit, or bark rabid on him: so that to escape the Lanterne, on stepping forth, he needs presence of mind, and a pair of pistols in his girdle! For he is one of the toughest of men.
673. Here indeed becomes notable one great difference between our two kinds of civil war: between the modern lingual or Parliamentary-logical kind,
and the ancient or manual kind in the steel battlefield;—much to the disadvantage of the former. In the manual kind, where you front your foe with drawn weapon, one right stroke is final; for, physically speaking, when the brains are out the man does honestly die, and trouble you no more. But how different when it is with arguments you fight! Here no victory yet definable can be considered as final.
Beat him down with Parliamentary invective, till sense be fled; cut him in two, hanging one-half on this dilemma-horn, the other on that; blow the brains of thinking-faculty quite out of him for the time;
it kills not; he rallies and revives on the morrow;
to-morrow he repairs his golden fires! The thing that will logically extinguish him is perhaps still a desideratum of Constitutional civilization. For how, till a man know, in some measure, at what point he becomes logically defunct, can Parliamentary Business be carried on, and Talk cease or shake?
674. Doubtless it was some feeling of this difficulty; and the clear insight how little such knowledge yet existed in the French Nation, new in the Constitutional career, and how defunct Aristocrats would continue to walk for unlimited periods, as Partridge
the Almanac-maker did,—that had sunk into the depth mind of People's-friend Marat, an eminently practical mind; and had grown there, in that richest putrescent soil, into the most original plan of action ever submitted to a People. Not yet has it grown; but it has germinated, it is growing; rooting itself into Tartarus, branching toward Heaven;
the second season hence, we shall see it risen out of the bottomless Darkness, full-grown, into disastrous Twilight,—a Hemlock-tree, great as the world; on or under whose boughs all the People's-friends of the world may lodge. "Two-hundred and sixty thousand Aristocrat heads;" that is the precisest calcu-tion, though one would not stand on a few hundreds;
yet we never rise as high as the round 300,000.
Shudder at it, O people; but it is as true as that ye yourselves, and your People's-friend, are alive.
Those prating Senators of yours hover ineffectual
on the barren letter, and will never save the Revolution. A Cassandra-Marat cannot do it, with his single shrunk arm; but with a few determined men it were possible. "Give me," said the People's-friend, in his cold way, when young Barbaroux, once his pupil in a course of what was called Optics, went to see him.
Give me 200 Naples bravoes, armed each with a good dirk, and a muff on his left arm by way of sliwith them I will traverse Frailee, and accomplish
the Revolution."* Nay, be grave, young Barbaroux;
For thou seest there is not jesting in those rheumy eyes, in that soot-bleared figure, most earnest of creat things; neither indeed, is there madness, of the strait-waistcoat sort.675. Supplied produce shall the Time ripen in caver-ous Marat, the man forbid; living in Paris cellars, lone as fanatic Anchorite in his Thebaid; say, as for seen Simon on his Pillar,—taking peculiar views therefrom. Patriots may smile; and, using him as bandog now to be muzzled, now to be let back, name him, as Desmoulins does, "Maximum of Patriotism," and "Cassandra-Marat;" but were it not singular if this dirk-and-muff plan of his (with superficial modifications) proved to be precisely the plan adopted?

676. After this manner, in these circumstances, do august Senators regenerate France. Nay, they are, in very deed, believed to be regenerating it; on account of which great fact, main fact of their history, the wearyed eye can never be permitted wholly to ignore them.

677. But, looking away now from these precincts of the Tuileries, where Constitutional Royalty, let Lafayette water it as he will, languishes too like a cut branch; and august Senators are perhaps at bottom only perfecting "their theory of defective verbs,"
—how does the young reality, young Sanscullotism thrive? The attentive observer can answer: It thrives bravely; putting forth new buds; expanding the old buds into leaves, into boughs. Is not French Existence, as before, most prurient, all loosened

678. In such a France as this, Hunger as we llave remarked, can hardly fail. The Provinces, the Southern Cities feel it in their turn; and what it brings; exasperation, preternatural suspicion. In Paris some halcyon days of abundance followed the Menade insurrection, with its Versailles grain-carts, and recovered Restore of Liberty; but they could not continue. The month is still October, when famishing Saint-Antoine, in a moment of passion, seizes a poor Baker, innocent "François the Baker," and hangs him, in Constantinople wise; but even this, singular as it may seem, does not cheapen bread! Too clear it is, no Royal bounty, no Municipal dexterity can adequately feed a Bastille-destroying Paris. Therefore, on view of the hanged Baker, Constitutionalism in sorrow and anger demands "Loi Martiale," a kind of Riot Act; and indeed gets it most readily, almost before the sun goes down.

679. This is that famed Martial Law, with its Red Flag, its "Drapeau Rouge," in virtue of which Mayor Bailly or any mayor, has but henceforth to hang out that new Oriflamme of his; then to read or mumble something about the King's peace; and, after certain pauses, serve any undispersing Assemblage with musket-shot, or whatever shot will disperse it. A decisive Law; and most just on one proviso: that all Patroliotism be of God, and all mob-assembling be of the Devil; otherwise not so just. Mayor Bailly, be unwilling to use it! Hang not out that new Oriflamme, flame not of gold but of the want of gold! The thrice-blessed Revolution is done, thou thinkest? If so, it will be well with thee.

680. But now let no mortal say henceforth that an august National Assembly wants riot! all it ever wanted was riot enough to balance Court-plotting; all it now wants, of Heaven or of Earth, is to get its theory of defective verbs perfected.

CHAPTER III.

681. With Famine and a Constitutional theory of defective verbs going on, all other excitement is conceivable. A universal shaking and sifting of French Existence this is: in the course of which, for one thing, what a multitude of low-lying figures are sifted to the top, and set busily to work there!

682. Dog-leech Marat, now far-seen as Simon Stylites, we already know; him and others, raised aloft. The mere sample these of what is coming, of what continues coming, upward from the realm of Night! Chaumette, and by and by Anaxagoras Chaumette, one already describes: mellifluous in street-groups; not now a sea-boy on the high and giddy mast: a mellifluous tribune of the common people, with long curling locks, on journaste of the thoroughfares: able sub-editor too; who shall rise,—to the very gallows. Clerk Taillen, he also is become sub-editor; shall become able-editor; and more. Bibliopolic Momoro, Typographic Prudhomme see new trades opening. Collot d'Herbois, tearing a passion to rags, pauses on the Thespian boards; listens, with that black bushy head, to the sound of the world's drama: shall the Mimetic become Real? Did ye hiss him, O men of Lyons? Better had ye clapped!

683. Happy now, indeed, for all manner of mimetic, half-original men! Tumid blustering, with more or less of sincerity, which need not be entirely sincere, yet the sincerer the better, is like to go far. Shall we say, the Revolution-element works itself rarer and rarer; so that only lighter and lighter bodies will float in it; till at last the mere blown-bladder is your only swimmer? Limitation of mind, then vehemence, promptitude, audacity, shall all be available; to which add only these two: cunning and good lungs. Good fortune must be presupposed. Accordingly, of all classes the rising one, we observe, is now the Attorney class: witness Bazires, Carriers, Fouquier-Tinville, Béaupo-Captain Bourdons: more than enough. Such figures shall Night, from her wonder-bearing bosom, emit; swarm after swarm. Of another deeper and deepest swarm, not yet dawned on the astonished eye; of pilfering Candle-snuffers. Thief-valets, disfrocked Capuchins, and so many Héberts, Henriots, Ronsins, Rossignols, let us, as long as possible, forbear speaking.

684. Thus, over France, all stirs that has what the Physiologists call irritability in it: how much more all wherein irritability has perfected itself into vitality, into actual vision, and force that can will. All stirs; and if not in Paris, flocks thither. Great and greater waxes President Danton in his Cordeliers Section; his rhetorical tropes are all "gigantic."

energy flashes from his black brows, menaces in his athletic figure, rolls in the sound of his voice "reverberating from the domes:" this man also, like Mirabeau, has a natural eye, and begins to see whither Constitutionalism is tending, though with a wish in it different from Mirabeau's.

685. Remark, on the other hand, how General Dumouriez has quitted Normandy and the Cherbourg Breakwater, to come—whither we may guess. It is his second or even third trial at Paris, since this New Era began; but now it is in right earnest, for he has quitted all else. Wiry, elastic, unwearied man; whose life was but a battle and a march! No, not a creature of Choiseul's, "the creature of God and of my sword,"—he fiercely answered in old days. Overfalling Corsican batteries, in the deadly hail; wriggling invincible from under his horse, at Closterkamp of the Netherlands, though tethered with a crushed stirrup-iron and nineteen wounds; tough minatory, standing at bay, as forlorn hope, on the skirts of Poland; intriguing, battling in cabinet and field; roaming far out, obscure, as King's spiral, or sitting sealeup, enchanted in Bastille; fencing, pamphleteering, scheming and struggling from the very birth of him,* the man has come thus far. How repressed, how irrepressible! Like some incarnate spirit in prison, which indeed he was; hewing on granite walls for deliverance; striking fire-flashes from them. And now has the general earthquake rent his cavern too? Twenty years younger, what might he not have done! But his hair has a shade of gray; his way of thought is all fixed, military. He can grow no further, and the new world is in such growth! We will name him, on the whole, one of Heaven's Swiss, without faith; wanting above all things work, work on any side. Work also is appointed him; and he will do it.

656. Not from over France only are the unrestful flocking toward Paris; but from all sides of Europe. Where the carcass is thither will the eagles gather. Think how many a Spanish Guzman, Martinico Fournier named "Fournier l'Américan," Engineer Mirande from the very Andes, were flocking or had flocked. Walloon Pereyra might boast of the strangest parentage: him, they say, Prince Kaunitz the Diplomatist heedlessly dropped; like ostrich-egg, to be hatched of Chance,—into an ostrich-uter! Jewish or German Freys do business in the great Cesspool of Agio; which Cesspool this Assignat-that has quickened, into a Mother of dead dogs. Swiss Clavière could found no Socinian Genevese Colony in Ireland; but he paused, years ago, prophetic, before the Minister's Hotel at Paris, and said, it was borne on his mind that he one day was to be Minister, and laughed. Swiss Pache, on the other hand, sits sleek-headed, frugal; the wonder of his own alley; and even of neighboring ones, for humility of mind and a thought deeper than most men's: sit there, Tartuffe, till wanted! Ye Italian Dubourmys, Flemish

657. Nor is our England without her missionaries. She has her life-saving Needham; to whom was solemnly presented a "civic sword,"—long since rusted into nothingness. Her Paine: rebellious Staymaker; unkempt; who feels that he, a single Needleman, did, by his "Common-Sense" Pamphlet, free America; that he can and will free all this World: perhaps even the other. Price-Stanhope Constitutional Association sends over to congratulate; welfare

* A trustworthy gentleman writes to me, three years ago, with a feeling which I cannot but respect, that his father, "the late Admiral Nesbitt" (not Needham, as the French journalists give it), is the Englishman meant; and furthermore that the sword is "not rusted at all," but lies, with the due memory attached to it, in his (her son's) possession at Plymouth, in a clear state. comes by National Assembly, though they are but a London Club; whom Burke and Toryism eye askance.

688. On thee too, for country's sake, O Chevalier John Paul, be a word spent, or misspent! In faded naval uniform, Paul Jones lingers visible here; like a wine-skin from which the wine is all drawn. Like the ghost of himself! Low is his once loud bruit; scarcely audible, save, with extreme tedium, in ministerial ante-chambers, in this or the other charitable dining-room, mindful of the past. What changes; culminatings and declinings! Not now, poor Paul, thou lookest wistful over the Solway brine, by the foot of native Criffel into blue mountainous Cumberland, into blue Infinitude; environed with thrift, with humble friendliness; thyself, young fool, longing to be aloft from it, or even to be away from it. Yes, beyond that sapphire Promontory, which men name St. Bees, which is not sapphire either, but dull sandstone, when one gets close to it, there is a world. Which world thou too shalt taste of!—From yonder White Haven rise his smoke-clouds; ominous though ineffectual. Proud Forth quakes at his bellying sails; had not the wind suddenly shifted. Flamborough reapers, home-going, pause on the hill-side: for what sulphur-clouds is that that defaces the sleek sea; sulphur-clouds spitting streaks of fire? A sea cock-fight it is, and of the hottest; where British Scrope and French-American Don Homme Richard do lash and throttle each other, in their fashion; and lo the desperate valor has suffocated the deliberate, and Paul Jones too is of the Kings of the Sea!

689. The Euxine, the Meotian waters felt thee next, and long-skirted Turks, O Paul; and thy fiery soul has wedst itself in thousand contractions;—to no purpose. For, in far lands, with scarlet Nassau-Siegens, with sinful Imperial Catherines, is not the heart broken, even as at home with the mean? Poor Paul! Hunger and dispiritment track thy sinking foots: once, or at most twice, in this Revolution-tumult the figure of thee emerges; mute, ghost-like, as "with stars dim-twinkling through." And then, when the light is gone quite out, a National Legislature grants "ceremonial funeral!" As good had been the natural Presbyterian Kirk-bell, and six feet of Scottish earth, among the dust of thy loved ones.—Such world lay beyond the Promontory of St. Bees. Such is the life of sinful mankind here below.

690. But of all strangers far the notablest for us is Baron Jean Baptiste de Clootz;—or, dropping baptisms and feudalisms, World Citizen Anarcharhis Clootz, from Cleves. Him mark, judicious Reader. Thou hast known his Uncle, sharp-sighted, thorough-going Cornelius de Pauw, who mercilessly cuts down cherished illusions; and of the finest antique Spartans will make mere modern cut-throat Mainots.* The like stuff is in Anarcharhis: hot metal; full of scorias, which should and could have been smelted out, but which will not. He has wandered over this terraqueous Planet; seeking, one may say, the Paradise we lost long ago. He has seen English Burke; has been seen of the Portugal Inquisition; has roamed, and fought, and written; is writing, among other things, "Evidences of the Mohammedan Religion." But now, like his Scythian adoptive godfather, he finds himself in the Paris Athens; surely, at last, the haven of his soul. A dashing man, beloved at Patriotic dinner-tables; with gayety, nay with humor: headlong, trenchant, of free purse; in suitable costume; though what mortal ever more despised costumes? Under all costumes Anacharsis seeks the man; not Stylites Marat will more freely trample costumes, if they hold no man. This is the faith of Anacharsis: That there is a Paradise discoverable; that all costumes ought to hold men. O Anacharsis, it is a headlong, swift-going faith. Mounted thereon, me seems, thou art hound hastily for the City of Nowhere; and wilt arrive! At best, we may say, arrive in good riding attitude; which indeed is something.

691. So many new persons and new things have come to occupy this France. Her old Speech and Thought, and Activity which springs from these, are all changing; fermenting toward unknown issues. To the dullest peasant, as he sits sluggish, overtoiled, by his evening hearth, one idea has come: that of Châteaux burnt; of Châteaux combustible. How altered all Coffee-houses, in Province of Capital! The Antre de Procope has now other questions than the Three Stagyrite Unities to settle; not theater-controversies, but a world-controversy: there, in the ancient pig-tail mode, or with modern Brutus's heads, do well-frizzed logicians hold hubbub, and Chaos umpire sits. The ever-enduring melody of Paris Salons has got a new ground-tone: ever-enduring; which has been heard, and by the listening Heaven too, since Julian the Apostate's time and earlier; made now as formerly.

692. Ex-Censor Suard, Ex-Censor, for we have freedom of the Press; he may be seen there; impartial, even neutral. Tyrant Grimm rolls large eyes, over a questionable coming Time. Atheist Naigeon, beloved-disciple of Diderot, crows, in his small, difficult way, heralding glad dawn. But on the other hand, how many Morrellets, Marmontels, who had sat all their life hatching Philosophical eggs, cackle now, in a state bordering on distraction, at the brood they have brought out! It was so delightful to have one's Philosophical Theorum demonstrated, crowned in the saloons: and now an infatuated people will not continue speculative, but have Practice!

693. There also observe Preceptress Genlis, or Sillery, or Sillery-Genlis,—for our husband is both Count and Marquis, and we have more than one title. Pretentious, frothy; a puritan yet creedless; darkening counsel by words without wisdom! For,

* Naigeon, Adresse à l'Assemblée Nationale (Paris,1790), sur la liberté des opinions.
+ See Marmontel, "Mémoires," passim; Morellet, "Mémoires," etc.
it is in that thin element of the Sentimentalist and Distinguished-Female that Sillery-Genlis works; she would gladly be sincere, yet can grow no sincerer than sincere-cant; sincere-cant of many forms, ending in the devotional form. For the present, on a neck still of moderate whiteness, she wears as jewel a miniature Bastille, cut on mere sandstone, but then actual Bastille sandstone. M. le Marquis is one of D'Orléans's errand-men; in National Assembly, and elsewhere. Madame, for her part, trains up a youthful D'Orléans generation in what superfinest morality one can; gives meanwhile rather enigmatic account of fair Mademoiselle Pamela, the daughter whom she has adopted. Thus she, in Palais-Royal Saloon;—whither, we remark, D'Orléans himself, spite of Lafayette, has returned from that English “mission” of his; surely no pleasant mission: for the English would not speak to him; and Saint Hannali More of England, so unlike Saint Sillery-Genlis of France, saw him shunned, in Vauxhall Gardens, like one pest-struck,* and his red-blue impassive visage waxing hardly a shade bluer.

CHAPTER IV.

JOURNALISM.

964. As for Constitutionalism, with its National Guards, it is doing what it can; and has enough to do: it must, as ever, with one hand wave persuasively, repressing Patriotism; and keep the other clenched to menace Royalist plotters. A most delicate task; requiring tact.

695. Thus, if People's-friend Marat has to-day his writ of “prise de corps, or seizure of body,” served on him, and dives out of sight, to-morrow he is left at large; or is even encouraged, as a sort of hound whose lying may be useful. President Danton, in open Hall, with reverberating voice, declares that, in a case like Marat's, "force may be resisted by force." Whereupon the Châtelet serves Danton also with a writ;—which however, as the whole Cordeliers District responds to it, what Constable will be prompt to execute? Twice more, on new occasions, does the Châtelet launch its writ; and twice more in vain: the body of Danton cannot be seized by Châtelet: he unseized, should he even fly for a season, shall behold the Châtelet itself flung into limbo.

696. Municipality and Brissot, meanwhile, are far on with their Municipal Constitution. The Sixty Districts shall become forty-eight Sections; much shall be adjusted, and Paris have its Constitution. A Constitution wholly Elective; as indeed all French Government shall and must be. And yet, one fatal element has been introduced: that of citizen actif. No man who does not pay the marc d'argent, or yearly tax equal to three days labor, shall be other than a passive Citizen: not the slightest vote for him; were he acting, all the year round, with sledge-hammer, with forest-leveling axe! Unheard of! cry Patriot Journals. Yes truly, my Patriot Friends, if Liberty, the passion and prayer of all men's souls, means Liberty to send your fifty-thousand part of a new Tongue-fencer into National Debating-club, then, be the gods witness, ye are hardly entreated. O, if in National Palaver (as the Africans name it), such blessedness is verily found, what tyrant would deny it to son of Adam? Nay, might there not be a Female Parliament too, with "screams from the Opposition benches," and the "honorable Member borne out in hysterics?" To a Children's Parliament would I gladly consent, or even lower if ye wished it. Beloved Brothers! Liberty, one may fear, is actually, as the ancient wise men said, of Heaven. On this Earth, where, thinks the enlightened public, did a brave little Dame de Staal (not Necker's Daughter, but a far shrewder than she) find the nearest approach to Liberty? After mature computation, cool as Dilworth's, her answer is, In the Bastille.

"Of Heaven?" answer many, asking. Woe that they should ask; for that is the very misery! "Of Heaven" means much; share in the National Palaver it may, or may as probably not mean.

697. One Sansculottic bough that cannot fail to flourish is Journalism. The voice of the People being the voice of God, shall not such divine voice make itself heard? To the ends of France; and in as many dialects as when the first great Babel was to be built! Some loud as the lion; some small as the sucking dove. Mirabeau himself has his instructive

* De Staël, " Mémoires" (Paris, 1821), i. 169-230.

Journal or Journals, with Geneva hodmen working in them; and withal has quarrels enough with Dame le Jay, his Female Bookseller, so ultra-compliant otherwise.*

698. King’s-friend Royou still prints himself. Barrère sheds tears of loyal sensibility in Break-of-Day Journal, though with declining sale. But why is Fréron so hot, democratic; Fréron, the King’s-friend’s Nephew. He has it by kind, that heat of his: usaq Fréron begot him; Voltaire’s Fréron; who fought stinging, while sting and poison-bag were left, were it only as Reviewer, and over Printed Waste-paper. Constant, illuminative, as the nightly lamp-lighter, issues the Moniteur, for it is now become diurnal, with facts and few commentaries, official, safe in the middle;—its Able Editors sunk long since, recoverably or irrecoverably, in deep darkness. Acid Loustalot, with his “vigor,” as of young sloes, shall never ripen, but die untimely: his Prudhomme, however, will not let that Révolutions de Paris die; but edit it himself, with much else,—dull-blustering Printer though he be.

699. Of Cassandra-Marat we have spoken often; yet the most surprising truth remains to be spoken: that he actually does not want sense; but, with croaking gelid throat, croaks out masses of the truth, on several things. Nay sometimes, one might almost fancy he had a perception of humor, and were laughing a little far down in his inner man. Camille is wittier than ever, and more outspoken, cynical;

THE FEAST OF PIKES.

yet sunny as ever. A light melodious creature; "born," as he shall yet say with bitter tears, "to write verses;" light Apollo, so clear, so lucid, in this war of the Titans, wherein he shall not conquer!

700. Folded and hawked Newspapers exist in all countries; but, in such a Journalistic element as this of France, other and stranger sorts are to be anticipated. What says the English reader to a Journal-Affiche, Placard-Journal; legible to him that has no halfpenny; in bright prismàtic colors, calling the eye from afar? Such, in the coming months, as Patriot Associations, public and private, advance, and can subscribe funds, shall plenteously hang themselves out; leaves, limed leaves, to catch what they can! The very Government shall have its Pasted Journal; Louvet, busy yet with a new "charming romance," shall write Sentinélles, and post them with effect; nay Bertrand de Moleville, in his extremity, shall still more cunningly try it.*

Great is Journalism. Is not every Able Editor a Ruler of the World, being a persuader of it; though self-elected, yet sanctioned, by the sale of his Numbers? Whom indeed the world has the readiest method of deposing, should need be: that of merely doing nothing to him; which ends in starvation.

701. Nor esteem it small what those Bill-stickers had to do in Paris: above Three-score of them: all with their cross-poles, haversacks, pastepots; nay with leaden badges, for the Municipality licenses them. A Sacred College, properly of World-rulers' Heralds, though not respected as such in an Era still incipient and raw. They made the walls of Paris didactic, suasive, with an ever-fresh Periodical Literature, wherein he that ran might read: Placard Journals, Placard Lampoons, Municipal Ordinances, Royal Proclamations; the whole other or vulgar Placard-department superadded,—or omitted from contempt! What unutterable things the stone-walls spoke, during these five years! But it is all gone: To-day swallowing Yesterday, and then being in its turn swallowed of To-morrow, even as Speech ever is. Nay what, O thou immortal Man of Letters, is Writing itself but Speech conserved for a time? The Placard Journal conserved it for one day; some Books conserve it for the matter of ten years; nay some for three thousand: but what then? Why, then, the years being all run, it also dies, and the world is rid of it. O, were there not a spirit in the word of man, as in man himself, that survived the audible bodied word, and tended either godward or else devilward forevermore, why should he trouble himself much with the truth of it, or the falsehood of it, except for commercial purposes? His immortality indeed, and whether it shall last half a lifetime or a lifetime and a half; is not that a very considerable thing? Immortality mortality:—there were certain runaways whom Fritz the Great bullied back into the battle with a: "R—, wollt ihr ewig leben (Unprintable Offscouring of Scoundrels, would ye live forever)!

* See Bertrand-Moleville, "Mémoires," H. 160, etc.
702. This is the Communication of Thought; how happy when there is any Thought to communicate! Neither let the simpler old methods be neglected in their sphere. The Palais-Royal tent, a tyrannous Patroloitsm has removed; but can it remove the lungs of man? Anaxagoras Chaumette we saw mounted on bourn-stones, while Tallien worked sedentary at the sub-editorial desk. In any corner of the civilized world, a tub can be inverted, and an articulate-speaking biped mount thereon. Nay, with contrivance, a portable trestle, or folding-stool, can be procured, for love or money; this the paripatic Oron can take in his hand, and, driven out here, set it up again there: saying mildly, with a Sage Bias, Omnia mea mecum porto. 703. Such is Journalism, hawked, pasted, spoken. How changed since One old Mitra walked this same Tuileries Garden, in gilt cocked-hat, with Journal at his nose, or held loose-folded behind his back; and was a notability of Paris, "Métra the Newsmen," and Louis himself was wont to say: Qu'en dit Métra? Since the first Venetian News-sheet was sold for a gazza, or farthing, and named Gazette! We live in a fertile world.

704. Where the heart is full, it seeks, for a thousand reasons, in a thousand ways, to impart itself. How sweet, indispensable, in such cases, is fellowship; soul mystically strengthening soul! The meditative Germans, some think, have been of opinion that Enthusiasm in general means simply excessive Congregating—Schwärmerey, or Sturmey. At any rate, do we not see glimmering hall-red embers, if laid

705. In such a France, gregarious Reunions will needs multiply, intensify; French Life will step out of doors, and, from domestic, become a public Club Life. Old Clubs, which already germinated, grow and flourish; new everywhere bud forth. It is the sure symptom of Social Unrest: in such way, most infallibly of all, does Social Unrest exhibit itself; find solacement, and also nutriment. In every French head there hangs now, whether for terror or for hope, some prophetic picture of a New France: prophecy which brings, nay which almost is, its own fulfilment; and in all ways, consciously and unconsciously, works toward that.

706. Observe, moreover, how the Aggregative Principle, let it be but deep enough, goes on aggregating, and this even in a geometrical progression; how when the whole world, in such a plastic time, is forming itself into Clubs, some One Club, the strongest or luckiest, shall by friendly attracting, by victorious compelling, grow ever stronger, till it become immeasurably strong; and all the others, with their strength, be either loving absorbed into it, or hostilely abolished by it. This if the Club-spirit is universal; if the time is plastic. Plastic enough is the time, universal the Club-spirit: such an all-absorbing, paramount One Club cannot be wanting.

707. What a progress, since the first salient-point of the Breton Committee! It worked long in secret, not languidly; it has come with the National Assembly to Paris; calls itself Club; calls itself, in imitation, as is thought, of those generous Price-Stanhope English who sent over to congratulate, French Revolution Club; but soon, with more originality, Club of Friends of the Constitution. Moreover it has leased for itself, at a fair rent, the Hall of the Jacobins Convent, one of our "superfluous edifices;" and does therefrom now, in these spring mouths, begin shining out on an admiring Paris. And so, by degrees, under the shorter popular title of Jacobins Club, it shall become memorable to all times and lands. Glance into the interior; strongly yet modestly benched and seated; as many as Thirteen Hundred chosen Patriots; Assembly Members not a few. Barnave, the two Lameths are seen there; occasionally Mirabeau, perpetually Robespierre; also the ferret-visage of Fouquier-Tinville with other attorneys; Anarchia of Prussian Scythia, and miscellaneous Patriots,—though all is yet in the most perfectly clean-washed state; decent, may dignified. President on platform, President's bell are not wanting; oratorical Tribune high-raised; nor strangers' galleries, wherein also sit women. Has any French Antiquarian Society preserved that written Lease of the Jacobins Convent Hall? Or was it, unluckier even than Magna Carta, cliped by sacrilegious Tailors? Universal History is not indifferent to it.

708. These Friends of the Constitution have met mainly, as their name may foreshadow, to look after Elections when an Election comes, and procure fit men; but likewise to consult generally that the Common-weal take no damage; one as yet sees not how. For indeed let two or three gather together anywhere, if it be not in Church, where all are bound to the passive state; no mortal can say accurately, themselves as little as any, for what they are gathered. How often has the breached barrel proved not to be for joy and heart-effusion, but for duel and head breakage; and the promised feast become a Feast of the Lapithae! This Jacobins Club, which at first shone resplendent, and was thought to be a new celestial Sun for enlightening the Nations, had, as things all have, to work through its appointed phases: it burned fortunately more and more lurid, more sulphurous, distracted;—and swam at last, through the astonished Heaven, like a Tartarean Portent, and lurid-burning Prison of Spirits in Pain.

709. Its style of eloquence? Rejoice, Reader, that thou knowest it not, that thou canst never perfectly know. The Jacobins published a Journal of Debates, where they that have the heart may examine: impassioned, dull-droning Patriotic eloquence: impalpable, unfertile—save for Destruction, which was indeed its work: most wearisome, though most deadly. Be thankful that Oblivion covers so much; that all car- rion is by and by buried in the green Earth's bosom, and even makes her grow the greener. The Jacobins are buried; but their work is not; it continues "making the tour of the world," as it can. It might be seen lately, for instance, with bared bosom and death-defiant eye, as far on as Greek Missolonghi; strange enough, old slumbering Hellas was resuscitated, into somnambulism which will become clear wakefulness, by a voice from the Rue St. Honoré! All dies, as we often say; except the spirit of man, of what man does. Thus has not the very House of the Jacobins vanished: scarcely lingering in a few old men's memories? The St. Honoré Market has brushed it away, and now where dull-droning eloquence, like a Trump of Doom, once shook the world, there is petty chaffering for poultry and greens. The sacred National Assembly Hall itself has become common ground; President's platform permeable to wain and dust-cart: for the Rue de Rivoli runs there. Verily, at Cock-crow (of this Cock or the other), all Apparitions do melt and dissolve in space.

710. The Paris Jacobins became "the Mother Society (Société Mère)" and had as many as "three hundred" shrill-tongued daughters in "direct correspondence" with her. Of indirectly corresponding, what we may call grand-daughters and minute pro- geny, she counted "forty-four thousand!"—But for the present we note only two things: the first of them a mere anecdote. One night, a couple of brother Jacobins are door-keepers; for the members take this post of duty and honor in rotation, and admit none that have not tickets: one door-keeper was the worthy Sieur Lais, a patriotic Opera-singer, stricken in years, whose windpipe is long since closed without result; the other, young, and named Louis Philippe, D'Orléans first-born, has in this latter time, after unheard-of destinies, become Citizen-King, and struggles to rule for a season. All flesh is grass; higher reed-grass, or creeping herb.

711. The second thing we have to note is historical; that the Mother Society, even in this its effulgent period, cannot content all Patriots. Already it must throw off, so to speak, two dissatisfied swarms; a swarm to the right, a swarm to the left. One party, which thinks the Jacobins lukewarm, constitutes itself into Club of the Cordeliers; a hotter Club: it is Danton's element; with whom goes Desmoulins. The other party, again, which thinks the Jacobins scalding-hot, flies off to the right, and becomes "Club of 1789, Friends of the Monarchic Constitution." They are afterward named "Feuillans Club;" their place of meeting being the Feuillans Convent. Lafayette is, or becomes, their chief man; supported by the respectable Patriot everywhere, by the mass of Property and Intelligence,—with the most flourishing prospects. They, in these June days of 1790, do, in the Palais Royal, dine solemnly with open windows; to the cheers of the people; with toasts, with inspiring songs,—with one song at least, among the feeblest ever sung.* They shall, in due time, be hooted forth, over the borders, into Cimmerian Night.

712. Another expressly Monarchical or Royalist Club, "Club des Monarchiens," though a Club of ample funds, and all sitting on damask sofas, cannot realize the smallest momentary cheer; realizes only scoffs and groans;—till, ere long, certain Patriots in disorderly sufficient number, proceed thither, for a night or for nights, and groan it out of pain. Vivacious alone shall the Mother Society and her family be. The very Cordeliers may, as it were, return into her bosom, which will have grown warm enough.

713. Fatal-looking! Are not such Societies an incipient New Order of Society itself? The Aggregative Principle anew at work in a Society grown obsolete, cracked asunder, dissolving into rubbish and primary atoms?

CHAPTER VI.

JE LE JURE.

714. With these signs of the times, is it not surprising that the dominant feeling all over France was still continually Hope? O blessed Hope, sole boon of man: whereby, on his strait prison-walls, are painted beautiful far-stretching landscapes; and into the night of very Death is shed holiest dawn! Thou art to all an indefeasible possession in this God's-world; to the wise a sacred Constantine's-banner, written on the eternal skies; under which they shall conquer, for the battle itself is victory: to the foolish some secular mirage, or shadow of still waters, painted on the parched Earth; whereby at least their dusty pilgrimage, if devious, becomes cheerfuller, becomes possible.

715. In the death tumults of a sinking Society, French Hope sees only the birth-struggles of a new unspeakably better Society; and sings, with full assurance of faith, her brisk Melody, which some inspired fiddler has in these very days composed for her,—the world-famous Ca-ira. Yes; "that will go;" and then there will come—? All men hope; even Marat hopes—that Patriotism will take matter and dirk. King Louis is not without hope: in the chapter of chances; in a flight to some Bouillé; in getting popularized at Paris. But what a hoping People he had, judge by the fact, and series of facts, now to be noted.

716. Poor Louis, meaning the best, with little insight and even less determination of his own, has to follow, in that dim wayfaring of his, such signals as may be given him; by back-stairs Royalism, by official or back-stairs Constitutionalism, whichever for the month may have convinced the royal mind. If flight to Bouillé, and (horrible to think!) a drawing of the civil sword do hang as theory, portentous in the background, much nearer is this fact of these Twelve Hundred Kings, who sit in the Salle de Manège. Kings uncontrollable by him, not yet ir­reverent to him. Could kind management of these but prosper, how much better were it than armed Emigrants, Turin intrigues, and the help of Austria! Nay are the two hopes inconsistent? Rides in the suburbs, we have found, cost little; yet they always brought vivats.* Still cheaper is a soft word; such as has many times turned away wrath. In these rapid days, while France is all getting divided into Departments, Clergy about to be remodeled, Popular Societies rising, and Feudalism and so much else is ready to be hurled into the melting-pot might not one try? 717. On the 4th of February, accordingly, M. le Président reads to his National Assembly a short autograph, announcing that his Majesty will step over, quite in an unceremonious way, probably about noon. Think, therefore, Messieurs, what it may mean; especially, how ye will get the Hall decorated a little. The Secretaries' Bureau can be shifted down from the platform; on the President's chair be slipped this cover of velvet, "of a violet color sprigged with gold fleur-de-lis;"—for indeed, M. le Président has had previous notice underhand, and taken counsel with Doctor Guillotin. Then some fraction of "velvet carpet," of like texture and color, cannot that be spread in front of the chair, where the Secretaries usually sit? So has judicious Guillotin advised— and the effect is found satisfactory. Moreover, as it is probable that his Majesty, in spite of the fleur-de-lis velvet, will stand and not sit at all, the President himself, in the interim, presides standing. And so, while some honorable Member is discussing, say, the division of a Department, Ushers announce: "His Majesty!" In person, with small suite, enter Majesty: the honorable Member stops short; the Assembly starts to its feet: the Twelve Hundred Kings "almost all," and the Galleries no less, do welcome the Restorer of French Liberty with loyal shouts. His Majesty's Speech, in diluted, conventional phraseology, expresses this mainly: That he, most of all Frenchmen, rejoices to see France getting regenerated; is sure, at the same time, that they will deal gently with her in the process, and not regenerate her roughly. Such was his Majesty's Speech: the feat he performed was coming to speak it, and going back again.

718. Surely, except to a very hoping People, there was not much here to build upon. Yet what did they not build! The fact that the King has spoken, that he has voluntarily come to speak, how inexpressibly encouraging! Did not the glance of his royal countenance, like concentrated sunbeams, kindle all hearts in an august Assembly; nay thereby in an inflammable enthusiastic France? To move "Deputation of thanks" can be the happy lot of but one man; to go in such Deputation the lot of not many. The Deputed have gone, and returned with what highest-down compliment they could; whom also the Queen met, Dauphin in hand. And still do not our hearts burn with insatiable gratitude; and to one other man a still higher blessedness suggests itself: To move that we all renew the National Oath.

719. Happiness honorable Member, with his word so in season as word seldom was; magic Fugleman of a whole National Assembly, which sat there bursting to do somewhat; Fugleman of a whole on-looking France! The President swears, declares that every one shall swear, in distinct je le jure. Nay the very Gallery sends him down a written slip signed, with their Oath on it; and as the Assembly now casts an eye that way, the Gallery all stands up and swears again. And then out of doors, consider at the Hotel-de-Ville how Bailly, the great Tennis-Court swearer, again swears, toward nightfall, with all the Municipalis, and Heads of Districts assembled there. And "M. Danton suggests that the public would like to partake;" whereupon Bailly, with escort of Twelve, steps forth to the great outer staircase; sways the ebullient multitude with stretched hand; takes their oath, with a thunder of "rolling drums," with shouts that rend the welkin. And on all streets the glad people, with moisture and fire in their eyes, "spontaneously formed groups, and swore one another,"* and the whole City was illuminated.

This was the 4th of February, 1790: a day to be marked white in Constitutional annals.720. Nor is the illumination for a night only, but partially or totally it lasts a series of nights. For each District, the Electors of each District will swear specially; and always as the District swears it illuminates itself. Behold them, District after District, in some open square, where the Non-Electing People can all see and join: with their uplifted right-hands, and je le jure; with rolling drums, with embracings, and that infinite hurrah of the enfranchised,—which any tyrant that there may be can consider! Faithful to the King, to the Law, to the Constitution which the National Assembly shall make.

721. Fancy, for example, the Professors of Universities parading the streets with their young France, and swearing, in an enthusiastic manner, not without tumult. By a larger exercise of fancy, expand duly this little word: The like was repeated in every Town and District in France! Nay one Patriot Mother, in Lagon of Brittany, assembles her ten children; and, with her own aged hand, swears them all herself, the high-souled venerable woman. Of all which, moreover, a National Assembly must be eloquently apprized. Such three weeks of swearing! Saw the Sun ever such a swearing people? Have they been bit by a swearing tarantula? No: but they are men and Frenchmen; they have Hope; and, singular to say, they have Faith, were it only in the Gospel according to Jean Jacques. O my Brothers, would to Heaven it were even as ye think and have sworn! But there are Lover's Oaths, which, bad they been true as love itself, cannot be kept; not to speak of Dicer's Oaths, also a known sort.

CHAPTER VII.

PRODIGIES.

722. To such lengths had the Contrat Social brought it, in believing hearts. Man, as is well said, lives by faith; each generation has its own faith, more or less; and laughs at the faith of its predecessor,—most unwisely. Grant indeed that this faith in the Social Contract belongs to the stranger sorts; that an unborn generation may very wisely, if not laugh, yet stare at it, and piously consider. For alas, what is Contract? If all men were such that a mere spoken or sworn Contract would bind them, all men were then true men, and Government a superfluity.

Not what thou and I have promised to each other, but what the balance of our forces can make us perform to each other; that, in so sinful a world as ours, is the thing to be counted on. But above all, a People and a Sovereign promising to one another: as if a whole People, changing from generation to generation, nay from hour to hour, could ever by any method be made to speak or promise; and to speak mere solecisms: “We, be the Heavens witness, which Heavens, however, do no miracles now; we, ever-changing Millions, will allow thee, changeful Unit, to force us or govern us!”

The world has perhaps seen few faiths comparable to that.

723. So nevertheless had the world then construed the matter. Had they not so construed it, how different had their hopes been, their attempts, their results! But so and not otherwise did the Upper Powers will it to be. Freedom by social Contract: such was verily the Gospel of that—Era. And all men had believed in it, as in a Heaven's Glad-tidings men should; and with overflowing heart and uplifted voice clave to it, and stood fronting Time and Eternity on it. Nay smile not; or only with a smile sadder than tears! This too was a better faith than the one it had replaced; than faith merely in the Everlasting Nothing and man's Digestive Power; lower than which no faith can go.

724. Not that such universally prevalent, universally jurant, feeling of Hope could be a unanimous one. Far from that. The time was ominous: social dissolution near and certain; renovation still a problem, difficult and distant, even though sure. But if ominous to some clearest on-looker, whose faith stood not with the one side or with the other, nor in the ever-vexed jarring of Greek with Greek at all,—how unspeakably ominous to dim Royalist participators; for whom Royalism was Mankind's palladium; for whom, with the abolition of Most-Christian Kingship and Most-Talleyrand Bishopship, all loyal obedience, all religious faith was to expire, and final Night envelop the Destinies of Man! On serious hearts, of that persuasion, the matter sinks down deep; prompting, as we have seen, to back-stairs plots, to Emigration with pledge of war, to Monarchic Clubs; nay to still madder things.
725. The Spirit of Prophecy, for instance, had been considered extinct for some centuries; nevertheless these last-times, as indeed is the tendency of last-times, do revive it; that so, of French mad things, we might have sample also of the maddest. In remote rural districts, whither Philosophism has not yet radiated, where a heterodox Constitution of the Clergy is bringing strife round the altar itself, and the very Church-bells are getting melted into small money-coin, it appears probable that the End of the World cannot be far off. Deep-musing atra-biliar old men, especially old women, hint in an obscure way that they know what they know. The Holy Virgin, silent so long, has not gone dumb; and truly now, if ever more in this world, were the time for her to speak. One Prophetess, though careless Historians have omitted her name, condition and whereabouts, becomes audible to the general ear; credible to not a few; credible to Friar Gerle, poor Patriot Chartreux, in the National Assembly itself! She, in Pythoness recitative, with wild-staring eye, sings that there shall be a Sign, or Mock Sun,—which, many say, shall be stamped with the Head of hanged Favras. List, Dom Gerle, with that poor addled poli of thine; list, O, list;—and hear nothing.

726. Notable, however, was the "magnetic vellum (vellin magnétique)" of the Sieurs d'Hozier and Petit-Jean, Parliamenters of Rouen. Sweet young

"Deux Amis," v. 7.

D'Hozier, "bred in the faith of his Missal, and of parchment genealogies," and of parchment generally; adust, melancholic, middle-aged Petit-Jean: why came these two to Saint-Cloud, where his majesty was hunting, on the festival of St. Peter and St. Paul; and waited there, in ante chambers, a wonder to whispering Swiss, the livelong day; and even waited without the Grates, when turned out; and had dismissed their valets to Paris, as with purpose of endless waiting? They have a magnetic vellum, these two; whereas the Virgin, wonderfully clothing herself in Mesmeric Cagliostrian Occult-Philosophy, has inspired them to jot down instructions and predictions for a much-straitened King. To whom, by Higher Order, they will this day present it; and save the Monarchy and World. Unaccountable pair of visual-objects! Ye should be men, and of the Eighteenth Century; but your magnetic vellum forbids us so to interpret. Say, are ye aught? Thus ask the Guard-house Captains, the Mayor of Saint-Cloud; nay, at great length, thus asks the Committee of Researches, and not the Municipal, but the National Assembly one. No distinct answer, for weeks. At last it becomes plain that the right answer is negative. Go, ye Chimeras, with your magnetic vellum; sweet young Chimeras, adust middle-aged one! The Prison-doors are open. Hardly again shall ye preside the Rouen Chamber of Accounts; but vanish obscurely into Limbo.*

CHAPTER VIII.

SOLEMN LEAGUE AND COVENANT.

727. Such dim masses, and specks of even deepest black, work in that white-hot glow of the French mind, now wholly in fusion and confusion. Old women here swearing their ten children on the new Evangel of Jean Jacques; old women there looking up for Favras's Heads in the celestial Luminary: these are preternatural signs, prefiguring somewhat.

728. In fact, to the Patriot children of Hope themselves it is undeniable that difficulties exist: emigrating Seigneurs; Parlements in sneaking but most malicious mutiny (though the rope is round their neck); above all, the most decided "deficiency of grains." Sorrowful; but, to a Nation that hopes, not irremediable. To a Nation which in fusion and ardent communion of thought; which, for example, on signal of one Fugleman, will lift its right-hand like a drilled regiment, and swear and illuminate, till every village from Ardennes to the Pyrenees has rolled its village-drum, and sent up its little oath, and glimmer of tallow-illumination some fathoms into the reign of Night!

729. If grains are defective, the fault is not of Nature or National Assembly, but of Art and Anti-National Intriguers. Such malign individuals, of the scoundrel species, have power to vex us, while the Constitution is a-making. Endure it, ye heroic Patriots; nay rather, why not cure it? Grains do grow, they lie extant there in sheaf or sack; only that regrettors and Royalist plotters, to provoke the People into illegality, obstruct the transport of grains. Quick, ye organized Patriot Authorities, armed National Guards, meet together; unite your good-will; in union is tenfold strength: let the concentrated flash of your Patriotism strike stealthy Scoundrelism blind, paralytic, as with a coup de soleil.

730. Under which hat or night-cap of the Twenty-five millions, this pregnant Idea first arose, for in some one head it did rise, no man can now say. A most small idea, near at hand for the whole world: but a living one, fit; and which waxed, whether into greatness or not, into immeasurable size. When a Nation is in this state that the Fugleman can operate on it, what will the word in season, the act in season, not do! It will grow verily, like the Boy's Bean, in the Fairy-Tale, heaven-high, with habitations and adventures on it, in one night. It is nevertheless unfortunately still a Bean (for your long-lived Oak grows not so); and the next night, it may lie felled, horizontal, trodden into common mud.—But remark, at least, how natural to any agitated Nation, which has Faith, this business of Covenanting is. The Scotch, believing in a righteous Heaven above them, and also in a Gospel far other than the Jean-Jacques one, swore, in their extreme need, a Solemn League and Covenant,—as Brothers on the forlorn-hope, and imminence of battle, who embrace, looking godward: and got the whole Isie co swear it; and even, in their tough Old-Saxon Hebrew-Presbyterian way, to keep it more or less;—for the thing, as such things are, was heard in Heaven and partially ratified there: neither is it yet dead, if thou wilt look; nor like to die. The French too, with their Gallic-Ethnic excitability and effervescence, have, as we have seen, real Faith, of a sort; they are hard bested, though in the middle of Hope: a National Solemn League and Covenant there may be in France too; under how different conditions; with how different development and issue!

731. Note, accordingly, the small commencement; first spark of a mighty firework: for if the particular fire cannot be fixed upon, the particular District can.

On the 29th day of last November, were National Guards by the thousand seen filing, from far and near, with military music, with Municipal officers in tricolor sashes, toward and along the Rhone stream, to the little town of Etoile. There with ceremonial evolution and maneuver, with fanfaronading, musketry salvoes, and what else the Patriot genius could devise, they made oath and obtestation to stand faithfully by one another, under Law and King; in particular, to have all manner of grains, while grains there were, freely circulated, in spite both of robber and regrater. This was the meeting of Etoile, in the mild end of November 1789. But now, if a mere empty Review, followed by Review-dinner, ball, and such gesticulation and flirtation as there may be, interests the happy County-town, and makes it the envy of surrounding County-towns, how much more might this! In a fortnight, larger Montélimart, half ashamed of itself will do as good, and better. On the Plain of Montélimart, or what is equally sonorous, "under the Walls of Montélimart," the 13th of December sees new gathering and obtestation; 6,000 strong; and now indeed, with these three remarkable improvements, as unanimously resolved on there. First, that the men of Montélimart do federate with the already federated men of Etoile. Second, that, implying not expressing the circulation of grain, they "saw in the face of God and their country" with much more emphasis and comprehensiveness, "to obey all decrees of the National Assembly, and see them obeyed till death (jusqu'à la mort)." Third, and most important, that official record of all this be solemnly delivered in, to the National Assembly, to M. de Lafayette, and "to the Restorer of French Liberty," who shall all take what comfort from it they can. Thus does larger Montélimart vindicate its Patriot importance, and maintain its rank in the municipal scale.*

733. And so, with the New-year, the signal is hoisted: for is not a National Assembly, and solemn deliverance there, at lowest a National Telegraph? Not only grain shall circulate, while there is grain, on highways or the Rhone-waters, over all that South-Eastern region,—where also if Monseigneur d'Artois saw good to break in from Turin, hot welcome might await him; but whatsoever Province of France is straitened for grain, or vexed with a mutinous Parlement, unconstitutional plotters, Monarchic Clubs, or any other Patriot ailment, can go and do likewise, or even do better. And now, especially, when the February swearing has set them all agog! From Brittany to Burgundy, on most Plains of France, under most City-walls, it is a blaring of trumpets, waving of banners, a Constitutional maneuvering: under the vernal skies, while Nature too is putting forth her green Hopes, under bright sunshine defaced by the stormful East; like Patriotism victorious, though with difficulty, over Aristocracy and defect of Grain! There march and constitutionally wheel, to the parading mood of file and drum, under their tricolor Municipals, our clear-gleaming Phalanxes; or halt, with uplifted right-hand, and artillery salvoes that imitate Jove's thunder; and all the Country, and metaphorically all "the Universe," is looking on. Wholly, in their best apparel, brave men, and beautifully dizzed women, most of whom have lovers there; swearing, by the eternal Heavens and this green-growing all-nutritive Earth, that France is free! 734. Sweetest days, when (astonishing to say) mortals have actually met together in communion and fellowship; and man, were it only once through long despicable centuries, is for moments verily the brother of man!—And then the Deputations to the National Assembly, with high-flown descriptive harangue; to M. de Lafayette, and the Restorer; very frequently moreover to the Mother of Patriotism, sitting on her stout benches in that Hall of the Jacobins! The general ear is filled with Federation. New names of Patriots emerge which shall one day become famih-iar: Boyer-Fonfrède eloquent denunciator of a rebellious Bordeaux Parlement; Max Isnard eloquent reporter of the Federation of Draguignan; eloquent pair, separated by the whole breadth of France, who are nevertheless to meet. Ever wider burns the fire of Federation; ever wider and also brighter. Thus the Brittany and Anjou brethren mention a Fraternity of all true Frenchmen; and so the length of invoking "pardon and death" on any renegade: moreover, if in their National-Assembly harangue, they glance plaintively at the mare d'argent which makes so many citizens passive, they, ever in the Mother-Society, ask, being henceforth themselves "neither Bretons nor Angevins but French," Why all France has not one Federation, and universal Oath of Brotherhood, once for all?* A most pertinent suggestion; dating from the end of March. Which pertinent suggestion the whole Patriot world cannot but catch, and reverberate and agitate till it become loud;—which in that case the Town-hall Municipal had better take up, and meditate. 735. Some universal Federation seems inevitable: the Where is given; clearly Paris: only the When, the How? These also productive Time will give; is already giving. For always as the Federative work goes on, it perfects itself, and Patriot genius adds contribution after contribution. Thus, at Lyons, in the end of the May month, we behold as many as fifty, or some say sixty, thousand, met to federate; and a multitude looking on which it would be difficult to number. From dawn to dusk! For our Lyons Guardians took rank, at five in the bright dewy morning; came pouring in, bright-gleaming, to the Quai de Rhone, to march thence to the Federation-field; amid wavings of hats and lady-handkerchiefs; glad shoutings of some 200,000 Patriot voices and hearts; the beautiful and brave! Among whom, courting no notice, and yet the notablest of all, what queen-like Figure is this: with her escort of house-friends and Chamagneux the Patriot Editor; come abroad with the earliest? Radiant with enthusiasm are those dark eyes, in that strong Minerva-face, looking dignity and earnest joy; joyfulest she where all are joyful. It is Roland de la Platriere's Wife!* Strict elderly Roland, King's Inspector of Manufactures here; and now likewise, by popular choice, the strictest of our new Lyons Municipals: a man who has gained much, if worth and faculty be gain; but, above all things, has gained to wife Philipon the Paris Engraver's daughter. Reader, mark that queenlike burgher-woman: beautiful, Amazonian-graceful to the eye; more so to the mind. Unconscious of her worth (as all worth is), of her greatness, of her crystal clearness; genuine, the creature of Sincerity and Nature, in an age of Artificiality, Pollution and Cant; there, in her still completeness, in her still invincibility, she, if thou knew it, is the noblest of all living Frenchwomen,—and will be seen, one day. O, blessed rather while unseen, even of herself! For the present she gazes, nothing doubting, into this grand theatricality; and thinks her young dreams are to be fulfilled.

736. From dawn to dusk, as we said, it lasts; and truly a sight like few. Flourishes of drums and trumpets are something; but think of an "artificial Rock fifty feet high," all cut into crag-steps, not without the similitude of "shrubs!" The interior cavity,—for in south it is made of deal,—stands solemn, a "Temple of Concord;" on the outer summit rises "a Statue of Liberty," colossal, seen for miles, with her Pike and Phrygian Cap, and civic column; at her feet a country's Altar, "Autel de la Patrie;"—on all which neither deal-timber nor lath-and-plaster, with paint of various colors, have been spared. But fancy then the banners all placed on the steps of the Rock; high-mass chanted; and the civic oath of fifty thousand: with what volcanic outburst of sound from iron and other throats, enough to frighten back the very Soane and Rhone; and how the brightest fireworks, and balls, and even rockets, closed in that night of the gods! And so the Lyons Federation vanishes too, swallowed of darkness;—and yet not wholly, for our brave fair Roland was there: also she, though in the deepest privacy, writes her Narrative of it in Champagneux's Courrier de Lyons; a piece which "circulates to the extent of 60,000," which one would like now to read.

452. THE FEAST OF PIKES.

737. But on the whole, Paris, we may see, will have little to devise; will only have to borrow and apply. And then as to the day, what day of all the calendar is fit, if the Bastille Anniversary be not? The particular spot too, it is easy to see, must be the Champ de-Mars; where many a Julian the Apostate has been lifted on bucklers, to France's or the world's sovereignty; and iron Franks, loud-clanging, have responded to the voice of a Charlemagne; and from old mere sublimities have been familiar.

CHAPTER IX.

SYMBOLIC.

738. How natural, in all decisive circumstances, is Symbolic Representation to all kinds of men! Nay, what is man's whole terrestrial Life but a Symbolic Representation, and making visible, of the Celestial invisible Force that is in him? By act and word he strives to do it; with sincerity, if possible; failing that, with theatricality, which latter also may have its meaning. An Almacks Masquerade is not nothing; in more genial ages, your Christmas Guisings, Feasts of the Ass, Abbots of Unreason, were a considerable something: sincere sports they were; as Almacks may still be sincere wish for sport. But what on the other hand, must not sincere earnest have been; say, a Hebrew Feast of tabernacles have been A whole Nation gathered, in the name of the Highcest, under the eye of the Highest; imagination herself flagging under the reality; and all noblest Ceremony as yet not grown ceremonial, but solemn, significant to the utmost fringe! Neither, in modern private life, are theatrical scenes, of tearful women wetting whole ells of cambric in concert, of impassioned bushy-whiskered youth threatening suicide, and such-like, to be so entirely detested: drop thou a tear over them thyself rather.

739. At any rate, one can remark that no Nation will throw by its work, and deliberately go out to make a scene without meaning something thereby. For indeed no scenic individual, with knavish hypocrical views, will take the trouble to soliloquise a scene: and now consider, is not a scenic Nation placed precisely in that predicament of soliloquizing, for its own behalf alone; to solace its own sensibilities, maudlin or other?—Yet in this respect, of readiness for scenes, the difference of Nations, as of men, is very great. If our Saxon Puritanic friends for example, swore and signed their National Covenant, without discharge of gunpowder, or the beating of any drum, in a dingy Covenant-Close of the Edinburgh High-street, in a mean room, where men now drink mean liquor, it was consistent with their ways so to swear it. Our Gallic-Encyclopedic friends, again, must have a Champ-de-Mars, seen of all the world, or universe; and such a Scene Exhibition, to which the Coliseum Amphitheatre was but a strollers' barn, as this old Globe of ours had never or hardly ever beheld. Which method also we reckon natural, then and there. Nor perhaps was the respective keeping of these two Oaths far out of due proportion to such respective display in taking them; inverse proportion, namely. For the theatricality of a People goes in a compound ratio; ratio indeed of their trustfulness, sociability, fervency; but then also of their excitability, of their porosity, not continent; or say, of their explosiveness, hot-flashing, but which does not last.

740. How true also, once more, is it that no man or Nation of men, conscious of doing a great thing, was ever, in that thing, doing other than a small one! O Champ-de-Mars Federation, with three-hundred drummers, twelve-hundred wind-musicians, and artillery planted on height after height to boom the tidings of it all over France, in few minutes! Could no Atheist-Naigeon contrive to discern, eighteen centuries off, those Thirteen most poor mean-dressed men, at frugal Supper, in a mean Jewish dwelling, with no symbol but hearts god-initiated into the "Divine depth of Sorrow," and a Do this in remembrance of me,—and so cease that small difficult crowing of his if he were not doomed to it?

CHAPTER X.

MANKIND.

741. Pardonable are human theatricalities; nay, perhaps touching, like the passionate utterance of a tongue which with sincerity stammers; of a head which with insincerity babbles,—having gone distracted. Yet, in comparison with unpremeditated outbursts of Nature, such as an Insurrection of women, how fainceless, unedifying, undelightful; like small ale palled, like an effervescence that has effervesced! Such scenes, coming of forethought, were they world-great, and never so cunningly devised, are at bottom mainly paste-board and paint. But the others are original; emitted from the great ever-living heart of Nature herself: what figure they will assume unspeakably significant. To us, therefore, let the French National Solemn League and Federation be the highest recorded triumph of the Thespian Art: triumphant surely, since the whole Pit, which was Twenty-five Millions, not only claps hands, but does itself spring on the boards and passionately set to playing there. And being such, be it treated as such: with sincere cursory admiration; with wonder from afar. A whole nation gone mumming deserves so much; but deserves not that loving minuteness a Menadic Insurrection did. Much more let prior, and as it were rehearsal scenes of Federation come and go, henceforward, as they list; and, on Plains and under City-walls, innumerable regimental bands blare-off into the Inane, without note from us.

742. One scene, however, the hastiest reader will momentarily pause on: that of Anacharsis Clootz and the Collective sinful Posterity of Adam.—For a Patriot Municipality has now, on the 4th of June, got its plan concocted, and got it sanctioned by National Assembly; a Patriot King assenting; to whom, were he even free to dissent, Federative harangues, overflowing with loyalty, have doubtless a transient sweetness. There shall come deputed National Guards, so many in the hundred, from each of the Eighty-three Departments of France. Likewise from all Naval and Military King's Forces shall Deputed quotas come; such Federation of National with Royal Soldier has, taking place spontaneously, been already seen and sanctioned. For the rest, it is hoped, as many as 40,000 may arrive: expenses to be borne by the Deputing Districts; of all which let District and Department take thought; and elect fit men,—whom the Paris brethren will fly to meet and welcome.

743. Now, therefore, judge if our Patriot artists are busy; taking deep counsel how to make the Scene worthy of a look from the Universe! As many as 15,000 men, spademen, barrow-men, stone-builders, rammers; with their engineers, are at work on the Champ-de-Mars; hollowing it out into a National Amphitheater; fit for such solemnity. For one may hope it will be annual and perennial; a "Feast of Pikes (Fête des Piques), notablest among the high tides of the year: in any case, ought not a scenic Free Nation to have some permanent National Amphitheater?" The Champ-de-Mars is getting hollowed out; and the daily talk and the nightly dream in most Parisian heads is of Federation and that only. Federate Deputies are already under way. National Assembly, what with its natural work, what with hearing and answering harangues of these Federates, of this Federation, will have enough to do! Harangue of "American Committee," among whom is that faint figure of Paul Jones as "with the stars dim-twinkling through it,"—come to congratulate us on the prospect of such auspicious day. Harangue of Bastille Conquerers, come to "renounce" any special recompense, any peculiar place at the solemnity,—since the Center Grenadiers rather grumble. Harangue of "Tennis-Court Club," who enter with far-gleaming Brass-plate, aloft on a pole, and the Tennis-Court Oath engraved thereon; which far-gleaming Brass-plate they purpose to affix solemnly in the Versailles original locality, on the 20th of this month, which is the anniversary, as a deathless memorial, for some years: they will then dine, as they come back, in the Bois de Boulogne;—cannot, however, do it without apprising the world. To such things does the august National Assembly ever and anon cheerfully listen, suspending its regenerative labors; and with some touch of impromptu eloquence, make friendly reply; as indeed the wont has long been; for it is a gesticulating, sympathetic People, and has a heart, and wears it on its sleeve.

744. In which circumstances, it occurred to the mind of Anarchist Cloots, that while so much was embodying itself into Club or Committee, and perorating applauded, there yet remained a greater and...

greatest; of which, if it also took body and perorated, what might not the effect be: Human kind namely, le Genre Humain itself! In what rapt creative moment the Thought rose in Anacharsis's soul; all his throes, while he went about giving shape and birth to it; how he was sneered at by cold worldlings; but did sneer again, being a man of polished sarcasm; and moved to and fro persuasive in coffee-house and soirée, and dived down assiduous-obscure in the great deep of Paris, making his Thought a Fact; of all this the spiritual biographers of that period say nothing. Enough that on the 19th evening of June 1790, the sun's slant rays lighted a spectacle such as our foolish little Planet has not often had to show: Anacharsis Clootz entering the August Salle de Manège, with the Human Species at his heels, Swedes, Spaniards, Polacks; Turks, Chaldeans, Greeks, dwellers in Mesopotamia; behold them all; they have come to claim place in the grand Federation, having an undoubted interest in it.

745 "Our Ambassador titles," said the fervid Clootz; "are not written on parchment, but on the living hearts of all men." These whiskered Polacks, long-flowing turbaned Ishmaelites, astrological Chaldeans, who stand so mute here, let them plead with you, august Senators, more eloquently than eloquence could. They are the mute representatives of their tongue-tied, befettered, heavy-laden Nations; who from out of that dark bewilderment gaze wistful, amazed, with half-incredulous hope, toward you, and this your bright light of a French Federation; bright particular day-star, the herald of universal day. We claim to stand there, as mute monuments, pathetically adumbrative of much.—From bench and gallery comes "repeated applause;" for what august Senator but is flattered even by the very shadow of Human Species depending on him? From President Sieyes, who presides this remarkable fortnight, in spite of his small voice, there comes eloquent though shrill reply. Anacharsis and the "Foreigners Committee" shall have place at the Federation; on condition of telling their respective Peoples what they see there. In the meantime, we invite them to the "honors of the sitting (honneur de la séance)." A long-flowing Turk, for rejoinder, bows with Eastern solemnity, and utters articulate sounds: but owing to his imperfect knowledge of the French dialect, his words are like spilt water; the thought he had in him remains conjectural to this day.

Anacharsis and Mankind accept the honors of the sitting; and have forthwith, as the old Newspapers still testify, the satisfaction to see several things. First and chief, on the motion of Lameth, Lafayette, Saint-Fargeau and other Patriot Nobles, let the others repugn as they will: all Titles of Nobility, from Duke to Esquire, or lower, are henceforth abolished. Then in like manner, Livery Servants, or rather the Livery of Servants. Neither, for the future, shall any man or woman, self-styled noble, be "incensed,"—foolishly fumigated with incense, in Church; as the wont has been. In a word, Feudal—ism being dead these ten months, why should her empty trappings and seutheous survive? the very Coats-of-arms will require to be obliterated;—and yet Cassandra-Marat on this and the other coache-panel notices that they "are but painted over," and threaten to peer through again. 747. So that henceforth De Lafayette is but the Sieur Motier, and Saint Fageau is plain Michel Lepeletier; and Mirabeau soon after has to say haughtily, "With your Riquetti you have set Europe at cross-purposes for three days." For his Countship is not indifferent to this man; which indeed the admiring people treat him with to the last. But let extreme Patriotism rejoice, and chiefly Anacharsis and Mankind; for now it seems to be taken for granted that one Adam is Father of us all! — 748. Such was, in historical accuracy, the famed feat of Anacharsis. Thus did the most extensive of Public Bodies find a sort of spokesman. Whereby at least we may judge of onewhing: what a humor the one sniffing, mocking City of Paris and Baron Clootz had got into; when such exhibition could appear a propriety, next door to a sublimity. It is true, Envy did, in after-times, pervert this success of Anacharsis; making him, from incidental "Speaker of the Foreign-Nations Committee," claim to be official permanent "Speaker, Orateur, of the Human Species," which he only deserved to be; and alleging, calumniously, that his astrological Chaldeans, and the rest, were a mere French rag-rag and bobtail disguised for the nonce; and, in short, sneering and fleering at him in her cold, barren way: all which however, he, the man he was, could receive on thick enough panoply, or even rebound therefrom, and also go his way.

749. Most extensive of Public Bodies, we call it; and also the most unexpected: For who could have thought to see All Nations in the Tuileries Riding-Hall? But so it is; and truly as strange things may happen when a whole People goes mumming and miming. Hast not thou thyself perchance seen diademmed Cleopatra, daughter of the Ptolemies, pleading, almost with bended knee, in unheroic tea-parlor, or dim-lit retail-shop, to inflexible gross Burghal Dignitary, for leave to reign and die; being dressed for it, and moneyless, with small children; while suddenly Constables have shut the Thespian barn, and her Antony pleaded in vain? Such visual spectra flit across this Earth, if the Thespian Stage be rudely interfered with; but much more, when as was said, Pit jumps on Stage, then is it verily, as in Herr Tieck's Drama, a Verkehrte Welt, or World Topsy-turvyed!

750. Having seen the Human Species itself, to have seen the "Dean of the Human Species" ceased now to be a miracle. Such "Doyen du Genre Humain (Eldest of Men)," had shown himself there, in these weeks: Jean Claude Jacob, a born Serf, deputed from his native Jura Mountains to thank the National Assembly for enfranchising them. On his bleached worn face are plowed the furrows of 120 years. He has heard dim patois-talk, of immortal Grund-Monarch victories; of a burned Palatinate, as he toiled and moiled to make a little speck of this Earth greener; of Cevennes Dragoonings; of Marlborough going to the war. Four generations have bloomed out, and loved and hated, and rustled off; he was forty-six when Louis Fourteenth died. The Assembly, as one man, spontaneously rose, and did reverence to the Eldest of the World; old Jean is to take his place among them, honorably, with covered head. He gazes feebly there, with his old eyes, on that new wonder-scene; dream-like to him, and uncertain, wavering amid fragments of old memories and dreams. For Time is all growing unsubstantial, dream-like; Jean's eyes and mind are weary, and about to close,—and open a far other wonder-scene, which shall be real. Patriot Subscription, Royal Pension was got for him, and he returned home glad; but in two months more he left it all, and went on his unknown way.

CHAPTER XI

AS IN THE AGE OF GOLD.

751. Meanwhile to Paris, ever going and returning, day after day, and all day long, toward that Field of Mars, it becomes painfully apparent that the spade-work there cannot be got done in time. There is such an area of it; 300,000 square feet; for from the Ecole Militaire (which will need to be done up in wood with balconies and galleries) westward to the Gate by the River (where also shall be wood, in triumphal arches), we count some thousand yards of length; and for breadth, from this umbrageous Avenue of eight rows, on the South side, to that corresponding one on the North, same thousand feet more or less. All this to be scooped out, and wheeled up in slope along the sides; high enough; for it must be rammed down there, and shaped stair-wise into as many as "thirty ranges of convenient seats," furnished with turf, covered with enduring timber;—and then our huge pyramidal Fatherland's-Altar (Autel de la Patrie), in the center, also to be raised and stair-stopped. Force-work with a vengeance; it is a World's Amphitheater! There are but fifteen days good; and at this languid rate, it might take half as many weeks. What is singular too, the spadesmen seem to work lazily; they will not work double-tides, even for offer of more wages, though their tide is but seven hours; they declare angrily that the human tabernacle requires occasional rest! 752. Is it Aristocrats secretly bribing? Aristocrats were capable of that. Only six months since, did not evidence get afloat that subterranean Paris, —for we stand over quarries and catacombs, dangerously, as it were midway between Heaven and the Abyss, and are hollow underground,—was charged with gunpowder, which should make us "leap"? Till a Cordeliers Deputation actually went to examine, and found it—carried off again. An accursed, incurable brood; all asking for "passports," in these sacred days. Trouble, of rioting, chateau-burning, is in the Limousin and elsewhere; for they are busy!

Between the best of Peoples and the best of Restorer
Kings they would sow grudges; with what a fiend's grin would they see this Federation, looked for by the Universe, fall!

753. Fall for want of spade-work; however, it shall not. He that has four limbs and a French heart can do spade-work; and will! On the first July Monday, scarcely has the signal-cannon boomed; scarcely have the languid mercenary Fifteen Thousand laid down their tools, and the eyes of onlookers turned sorrowfully to the still high Sun; when this and the other Patriot, fire in his eye, snatches barrow and mattock, and himself begins indignantly wheeling. Whom scores and then hundreds follow; and soon a volunteer Fifteen Thousand are shoveling and trundling; with the heart of giants: and all in right order, with that extemporaneous adroitness of theirs:
whereby such a lift has been given, worth three mercenary ones;—which may end when the late twilight thickens, in triumph-shouts, heard or heard of be-

754. A sympathetic population will wait, next day, with eagerness, till the tools are free. Or why wait?
Spades elsewhere exist! And so now bursts forth that effulgence of Parisian enthusiasm, good-heartedness and brotherly love; such, if Chroniclers are trustworthy, as was not witnessed since the Age of 256 December, 1789 (newspapers in "Histoire Parle-mentaire," iv. 446).

Gold. Paris, male and female, precipitates itself toward its Southwest extremity, spade on shoulder.
Streams of men, without order; or in order, as ranked fellow-craftsmen, as natural or accidental reunions, march toward the Field of Mars. Three-deep these march; to the sound of stringed music; preceded by young girls with green boughs and tricolor streamers: they have shouldered, soldier-wise, their shovels and picks; and with one throat are singing ga-ira. Yes, pardieu ga-ira, cry the passengers on the streets. All corporate Guilds, and public and private Bodies of Citizens, from the highest to the lowest, march; the very Hawkers, one finds, have cleared bawling for one day. The neighboring Villages turn out: their able men come marching, to village fiddle or tambourine and triangle, under their Mayor, or Mayor and Curate, who also walk bespaded, and in tricolor sash. As many as 150,000 workers;
may at certain seasons, as some count, 250,000; for,
in the afternoon especially, what mortal but, finishing his hasty day's work, would run! A stirriug
City: from the time you reach the Place Louis-Quinze, southward over the River, by all Avenues, it is one living throng. So many workers; and no mercenary mock-workers, but real ones that lie freely to it: each Patriot stretches himself against the stubborn glebe; hews and wheels with the whole weight that is in him.

755. Amiable infants (aimables enfants)! They do the "police de l'atelier" too, the guidance and go-vance, themselves: with that ready will of theirs, with that extemporaneous adroitness. It is a true brethren's work; all distinctions confounded, abolished; as it was in the beginning, when Adam himself devised. Long-frocked tonsured Monks, with short-skirted Water-carriers, with swallow-tailed well-fizzled Incroyables of a Patriot turn; dark Charcoal-men, meal-white Peruke-makers; or Peruke-wearers, for Advocate and Judge are there, and all heads of Districts; sober Nuns sisterlike with flaunting Nymphs of the Opera, and females in common circumstances named unfortunate: the patriot Rag-picker, and perfumed dweller in palaces; for Patriotism, like New-birth, and also like death, levels all. The Printers have come marching, Prudhomme's all in Paper-caps with Révolutions de Paris printed on them; as camille notes; wishing that in these great days there should be a Pacte des Ecrivains too, or Federation of Able Editors.* Beautiful to see! The snowy linen and delicate pantaloon alternates with the soiled check-shirt and bushel-breeches; for both have cast their coats, and under both are four limbs and a set of Patriot muscles. There do they pick and shovel; or, yoked in long strings to box-barrow or overloaded tumbril; joyous, with one mind. Abbé Maury did not pull, but the Charcoalmen brought a mummer guised like him, and he had to pull in effigy. Let no august Senator disdain the work: Mayor Bailly, Generalissimo Lafayette are there;—and, alas, shall be there again another day! The King himself comes to see: sky-rending Vive-le-roi! "and suddenly with shouldered spades they form a guard of honor round him." Whosoever can come comes; to work, or to look, and bless the work.

AS IN THE AGE OF GOLD.

756. Whole families have come. One whole family we see clearly of three generations; the father picking, the mother shoveling, the young ones wheeling assiduously; old grandfather, hoary with ninety-three years, holds in his arms the youngest of all:* trisky, not helpful this one; who nevertheless may tell it to his grandchildren; and how the Future and the Past alike locked on, and with falling or with half-formed voice, faltered their ça-ira. A vintner has wheeled in, on Patriot truck, beverage of wine: "Drink not, my brothers, if ye are not thirsty; that your cask may last the longer;" neither did any drink but men evidently exhausted. A dapper Abbé looks on sneering: "To the barrow!" cry several whom he, lest a worse thing befall him, obeys: nevertheless one wiser Patriot barrowman, arriving now, interposes his "arête," setting down his own barrow, he snatches the Abbé's; trundles it fast, like an infected thing, forth of the Champ-de-Mars circuit, and discharges it there. Thus too a certain person (of some quality, or private capital, to appearance), entering hastily, flings down his coat, waistcoat and two watches, and is rushing to the thick of the work:

* See newspapers, etc. (in "Histoire Parlementaire," vi. 381-406.)

* Meroter, ii. 76, etc.
"But your watches?" cries the general voice.—"Does one distrust his brothers?" answers he; nor were the watches stolen. How beautiful is noble sentiment: like gossamer gauze, beautiful and cheap; which will stand no tear and wear! Beautiful cheap gossamer gauze, thou film-shadow of a raw material of Virtue, which art not woven, nor likely to be, into Duty; thou art better than nothing, and also worse!

757. Young Boarding-school Boys, College Students, shout Vive la Nation, and regret that they have yet "only their sweat to give." What say we of Boys? Beautifullest of Hebes; the loveliest of Paris, in their light air-robcs, with ribbon-girdle of tricolor, are there; shoveling and wheeling with the rest; their Hebe eyes brighter with enthusiasm, and long hair in beautiful dishevelment; broad-pressed are their small fingers; but they make the patriot barrow go, and even force it to the summit of the slope (with a little tracing, which what man's arm were not too happy to lend?)—then bound down with it again, and go for more; with their long locks and tricolors blown back; graceful as the rosy Hours. O, as that evening Sun fell over the Champ-de-Mars, and tinted with fire the thick umbrageous boscage that shelters it on this hand and on that, and struck direct on those Domes and two-and-forty Windows of the Ecole Militaire, and made them all of burnished gold,—saw he on his wide zodiac road other such sight? A living garden spotted and dotted with such flowerage; all colors of the prism; the beautifullest blent friendly with the usefulest; all growing and working brotherlike there under one warm feeling, were it but for days; once and no second time! But Night is sinking; these Nights, too, into Eternity. The hastiest traveler Versaillese-ward has drawn bridle on the heights of Chaillot: and looked for moments over the River; reporting at Versailles what he saw, not without tears.*

758. Meanwhile, from all points of the compass, Federates are arriving: fervid children of the South, "who glory in their Mirabeau;" considerate North-blooded Mountainiers of Jura; sharp Bretons, with their Gaelic suddenness; Normans, not to be overreached in bargain: all now animated with one noblest fire of Patriotism. Whom the Paris brethren march forth to receive; with military solemnities, with fraternal embracing, and a hospitality worthy of the heroic ages. They assist at the Assembly's Debates; these Federates; the Galleries are reserved for them. They assist in the toils of the Champ-de-Mars; each new troop will put its hand to the spade; lift a hod of earth on the Altar of the Fatherland. But the flourishes of rhetoric, for it is a gesticulating People; the moral-sublime of those Addresses to an August Assembly, to a Patriot Restorer! Our Breton Captain of Federates kneels even, in a fit of enthusiasm, and gives up his sword; he wet-eyed to a King wet-eyed. Poor Louis! These, as he said afterward, were among the bright days of his life.

759. Reviews also there must be; royal Federate-reviews, with King, Queen, and tricolor Court looking on: at lowest, if, as is too common, it rains, our Federate Volunteers will file through the inner gateways, Royalty standing dry. Nay there, should some stop occur, the beautifullest fingers in France may take you softly by the lapelle, and, in mild flute-voice, ask: "Monsieur, of what Province are you?" Happy he who can reply, chivalrously lowering his sword's-point, "Madame, from the Province your ancestors reigned over." He that happy "Provincial Advocate," now Provincial Federate, shall be rewarded by a sun-smile, and such melodious glad words addressed to a King: "Sire, these are your faithful Lorrainers." Cheerier verily in these holidays, is this "sky-blue faced with red" of a National Guardsman, than the dull black and gray of a Provincial Advocate, which in work-days one was used to. For the same thrice-blessed Lorrainer shall, this evening, stand sentry at a Queen's door; and feel that he could die a thousand deaths for her: then again, at the outer gate, and even a third time, she shall see him; nay he will make her do it; presenting arms with emphasis, "making his musket jingle again:" and in her salute there shall again be a sun-smile, and that little blond-locked too hasty Dauphin shall be admonished, "Salute, then, Monsieur; don't be unpolite:" and therewith she, like a bright Sky-wanderer or Planet with her little Moon, issues forth peculiar.8

760. But at night, when Patriot spade-work is over, figure the sacred rites of hospitality! Lepelletier Saint-Fargeau; a mere private-senator, but with great possessions, has daily his "hundred dinner-guests;" the table of Generalissimo Lafayette may double that number. In lowly parlor, as in lofty saloon, the wine-cup passes round; crowned by the smiles of Beauty; be it of lightly tripping Grisette or of high-sailing Dame, for both equally have beauty, and smiles precious to the brave.

CHAPER XIII.

SOUND AND SMOKE.

761. And so now, in spite of plotting Aristocrats, lazy hired spademen, and almost of Destiny itself (for there has been much rain too), the Champ-de-Mars, on the 13th of the month, is fairly ready: trimmed, rammed, buttressed with firm masonry; and Patriotism can stroll over it admiring; and as it were rehearsing, for in every head is some unutterable image of the morrow. Pray Heaven there be not clouds. Nay what far worse cloud is this, of a misguided Municipality that talks of admitting Patriotism to the solemnity by tickets! Was it by tickets we were admitted to the work; and to what brought the work? Did we take the Bastille by tickets? A misguided Municipality sees the error; at late midnight, rolling drums announce to Patriotism starting half out of its bed-clothes, that it is to be ticketless. Pull down thy nightcap therefore; and, with demiarticulate grumble, significant of several things, go pacified to sleep again. To-morrow is Wednesday morning; unforgettable among the fasti of the world.

762. The morning comes, cold for a July one; but such a festivity would make Greenland smile. Through every inlet in that National Amphitheatre (for it is a league in circuit, cut with openings at due intervals), floods in the living throng; covers, without tumult, space after space. The Ecole Militaire has galleries and overvaulting canopies, wherein Carpentry and Painting have vied, for the Upper Authorities; triumphal arches, at the Gate by the River, bear inscriptions, if weak, yet well-meant and orthodox. Far aloft, over the Altar of the Fatherland, on their tall crane standards of iron, swing pensile our antique Cassolettes or Pans of Incense; dispensing sweet incense-fumes,—unless for the Heathen Mythology, one sees not for whom. Two hundred thousand Patriotic Men; and, twice as good, one hundred thousand Patriotic Women, all decked and glorified as one can fancy, sit waiting in this Champ-de-Mars.

763. What a picture; that circle of bright-dyed Life, spread up there, on its thirty-seated Slope; leaning, one would say, on the thick umbrage of those Avenue Trees, for the stems of them are hidden by the height; and all beyond it mere greenness of Summer Earth, with the gleams of waters, or white sparklings of stone edifices; little circular enamel picture in the center of such a vase—of emerald! A vase not empty: the Invalides Cupolas want not their population, nor the distant Windmills of Montmartre; on remotest steeple and invisible village belfry stand men with spy-glasses. On the heights of Chaillot are many-colored undulating groups; round and far on, over all the circling heights that embosom Paris, it is as one more or less peopled Amphitheater; which the eye grows dim with measuring. Nay heights, as was before hinted, have cannon; and a floating-battery of cannon is on the Seine. When eye fails, ear shall serve; and all France properly is but one Amphitheatre; for in paved town and unpaved hamlet men walk listening; till the muffled thunder sound audible on their horizon, that they too may begin swearing and firing. But now, 'to streams of music, come Federates enough,—for they have assembled on the Boulevard Saint-Antoine or thereby, and come marching through the City, with their Eighty-three Department Banners, and blessings not loud but deep; comes National Assembly, and takes seat under its Canopy; comes Royalty, and takes seat on a throne beside it. And Lafayette, on white charger, is here, and all the civic Functionaries; and the Federates form dances, till their strictly military evolutions and maneuvers can begin.

764. Evolutions and maneuvers? Task not the pen of mortal to describe them; tramce imagination droops;—declares that it is not worth while. There is wheeling and sweeping, to slow, to quick and double-quick time: Sieur Motier, or Generalissimo...
Lafayette, for they are one and the same, and he is General of France, in the King's stead, for four-and-twenty hours; Sieur Motier must step forth, with that sublime chivalrous gait of his; solemnly ascend the steps of the Fatherland's Altar, in sight of Heaven and of the scarcely breathing Earth; and, under the creak of those swinging Cassolettes, "pressing his sword's point firmly there," pronounce the Oath.

To King, to Law, and Nation (not to mention "grains," with their circulating), in his own name and that of armed France. Whereas there is waving of banners, and acclaim sufficient. The National Assembly must swear, standing in its place; the King himself audibly. The king swears; and now be the welkin split with vivats; let citizens enfranchised embrace, each smiting heartily his palm into his fellow's; and armed Federates clang their arms; above all, that floating battery speak! It has spoken,—to the four corners of France. From Arras to Avignon; from Metz to Bayonne! Over Orleans and Blois it rolls, in cannon-recitative; Puy bellows of it amid his granite mountains; Fan where is the shell-cradle of Great Henri. At far Marseilles, one can think, the ruddy evening witnesses it; over the deep-blue Mediterranean waters, the Castle of If ruddy-dinted darts forth, from every cannon's mouth, its tongue of fire; and all the people shout: Yes, France is free. O glorious France, that has burst out so; into universal sound and smoke; and attained—the Phrygian Cap of Liberty! In all Towns, Trees of Liberty also may be planted; with or without advantage. Said we not, it was the highest stretch attained by the Thespian Art on this Planet, or perhaps attainable?

765. The Thespian Art, unfortunately, one must still call it; for behold there, on this Field of Mars, the National Banner, before there could be any swearing, were to be all blessed. A most proper operation; since surely without Heaven's blessing bestowed, say even, audibly or inaudibly sought, no Earthly banner or contrivance can prove victorious: but now the means of doing it? By what thrice-divine Franklin thunder-rod shall miraculous fire be drawn out of Heaven; and descend gently, life-giving, with health to the souls of men? Alas, by the simplest: by Two Hundred shaven-crowned Individuals, "in snow-white albs, with tricolor girdles," arranged on the steps of Fatherland's Altar; and, at their head for spokesman, Soul's-Overseer Talleyrand-Perigord! These shall act as miraculous thunder-rod,—to such length as they can. O ye deep azure Heavens, and thou green all-nursing Earth; ye Streams everflowing; deciduous Forests that die and are born again, continually, like the sons of men; stone Mountains that die daily with every rain-shower, yet are not dead and leveled for ages of ages, nor born again (it seems) but with new world-explosions, and such tumultuous seething and tumbling, steam half-way to the Moon; O thou unfathomable mystic All, garment and dwelling-place of the Unnamed; and thou, articulate-speaking Spirit of Man, who moldest and modelest that Unfathomable Unnamable even as we see,—is not there a miracle? That some French mortal should, we say not have believed, but pretended to imagine he believed that Talleyrand and Two Hundred pieces of white Calico could do it!

766. Here, however, we are to remark with the sorrowing Historians of that day, that suddenly, while Episcopus Talleyrand, long-stoled, with miter and tricolor belt, was yet but hitching up the Altar-steps to do his miracle, the material Heaven grew black; a north-wind, moaning cold moisture, began to sing; and there descended a very deluge of rain. Sad to see! The thirty-staired Seats, all round our Amphitheatre, get instantaneously slated with mere umbrellas, fallacious when so thick set: our antique Cassolettes become water pots; their incense-smoke gone hissing, in a whiff of muddy vapor. Alas, instead of vivats, there is nothing now but the furious peppering and rattling. From three to four hundred thousand human individuals feel that they have a skin; happily imperious. The General's sash runs water: how all military banners droop; and will not wave, but lazily flap, as if metamorphosed into painted tin-banners! Worse far worse these hundred thousand, such is the Historian's testimony, of the fairest of Frailie! Their snowy muslins all splashed and draggled; the ostrich-feather shrunk shamefully to the backbone of the feather; all caps are ruined; innermost pasteboard molten into its original pap: Beauty no longer swims decorated in her garniture, like Love goddess hidden-revealed in her Paphian clouds, but struggles in disastrous imprisonment in it, for "the shape was noticeable;" and now only sympathetic interjections, titterings, te-heeings, and resolute good-humor will avail. A deluge; an incessant sheet of fluid-column of rain,—such that our Overseer's very miter must be filled; not a miter, but a filled and leaky fire-bucket on his reverend head!—Regardless of which, Overseer Talleyrand performs his miracle; the Blessing of Talleyrand, another than that of Jacob, is on all the Eighty-three departmental flags of France; which wave or flap, with such thankfulness as needs. Toward three o'clock, the sun beams out again; the remaining evolutions can be transacted under bright heavens, though with decorations much damaged. 767. On Wednesday our Federation is consummated; but the festivities last out the week, and over into the next. Festivities such as no Bagdad Caliph, or Aladdin with the Lamp, could have equaled. There is a Jousting on the River; with its water-somersets, splashing and ha-ha-ing: Abbé Fauchet, Te Deum Fauchet, preaches, for his part, in the rotunda of the Corn-Market, a funeral harangue on Franklin; for whom the National Assembly has lately gone three days in black. The Motier and Lepelletier tables still groan with viands; roofs ringing with patriotic toasts. On the fifth evening, which is the Christian Sabbath, there is a universal...
Ball. Paris, out of doors and in, man, woman and child, is jigging it, to the sound of harp and four-stringed fiddle. The hoariest-headed man will tread one other measure, under this nether Moon; speechless nurselings, as we call them, in arms; and sprawl out numb-plump little limbs—impatient for muscularity, they know not why. The stiffest back bends more or less; all joists creak.

768. Or out, on the Earth’s breast itself, behold the Ruins of the Bastille. All lamp-lit, allegorically decorated; a Tree of Liberty sixty feet high; and Phrygian Cap on it, of size enormous, under which King Arthur and his round-table might have dined! In the depths of the back-ground is a single lugubrious lamp, rendering dim-visible one of your iron cages, half-buried, and some Prison stones.—Tyranny vanished downward, all gone but the skirt: the rest wholly lamp-festoons, trees real or of pasteboard; in the similitude of a fairy grove; with this inscription, readable to runner: “Ici l’on danse (Dancing Here).” As indeed had been obscurely foreshadowed by Cagliostro,* prophetic Quack of Quacks, when he, four years ago, quitted the grim durance;—to fall into a grimmer, of the Roman Inquisition, and not quit it.

769. But, after all, what is this Bastille business to that of the Champs Elysées! Thither, to these Fields well named Elysian, all feet tend. It is radiant as day with festooned lamps; little oil-cups, like variegated fire-flies, daintily illumine the highest leaves: trees there are all sheeted with variegated fire, shedding far a glimmer into the dubious wood. There, under the free sky, do tight-limbed Federates, with fairest newfound sweethearts, elastic as Diana, and not of that coyness and tart humor of Diana, thread their jocund mazes, all through the ambrosial night; and hearts were touched and fired; and seldom surely had our old Planet, in that huge coneic Shadow of hers, “which goes beyond the Moon, and is named Night,” curtained such a Ball-room. O if, according to Seneca, the very gods look down on a good man struggling with adversity, and smile; what must they think of Five-and-twenty million indifferent ones victorious over it,—for eight days and more.

770. In this way, and in such ways, however, has the Feast of Pikes danced itself off: gallant Federates wending homeward, toward every point of the compass, with feverish nerves, heart and head much heated; some of them, indeed, as Dampmartin’s elderly respectable friend from Strasburg, quite “burnt out with liquors,” and flickering toward extinction.* The Feast of Pikes has danced itself off, and become defunct, and the ghost of a Feast,—nothing of it now remaining but this vision in men’s memory; and the place that knew it (for the slope of that Champ-de-Mars is crumbled to half the original height!) now knowing it no more. Undoubtedly one of the memorablest National High-tides. Never or hardly ever, as we said, was Oatli sworn with such heart-effusion, emphasis and expenditure of joyance; and then it was broken irremediably within year and day. Ah, why? When the swearing of it was so heavenly-joyful, bosom clasped to bosom, and Five-and-twenty million hearts all burning together; O ye inexorable Destinies, why?—Partly because it was sworn with such overjoyance; but chiefly, indeed, for an older reason; that Sin had come into the world, and Misery by Sin! These Five-and-twenty millions, if we will consider it, have now henceforth, with that Phrygian Cap of theirs, no force over them, to bind and guide; neither in them, more than heretofore, is guiding force, or rule of just living: how then, while they all go rushing at such a pace, on unknown ways, with no bridle, toward no aim, can hurly-burly unutterable fail? For verily not Federation rose-pink is the color of this Earth and her work: not by outbursts of noble-sentiment, but with far other ammunition, shall a man front the world.

* Dampmartin, “Evénemens,” i. 144-184.

771. But how wise, in all cases, to "husband your fire;" to keep it deep down, rather, as genial radical-heat! Explosions, the forciblest, and never so well directed, are questionable; far oftener futile, always frightfully wasteful: but think of a man, of a Nation of men, spending its whole stock of fire in one artificial Firework! So have we seen fond weddings (for individuals, like Nations, have their High-tides) celebrated with an outburst of triumph and decay, at which the elderly shook their heads. Better had a serious cheerfulness been; for the enterprise was great. Fond pair! the more triumphant ye feel, and victorious over terrestrial evil, which seems all abolished, the wider-eyed will your disappointment be to find terrestrial evil still extant. "And why extant?" will each of you cry; "Because my false mate has played the traitor: evil was abolished; I, for one, meant faithfully, and did, or would have done!" Whereby the over-sweet moon of honey changes itself into long years of vinegar: perhaps divulslive vinegar, like Hannibal's.

772. Shall we say, then, the French Nation has led Royalty, or wooed and teased poor Royalty to lead her, to the hymeneal Fatherland's Altar, in such over-sweet manner; and has, most thoughtlessly, to celebrate the nuptials with due shine and demonstration, —burnt her bed?
BOOK SECOND.

CHAPTER I.

BOUILLE.

773. Dimly visible, at Metz on the North-Eastern frontier, a certain brave Bouillé, last refuge of Royalty in all straits and meditations of flight, has for many months hovered occasionally in our eye; some name or shadow of a brave Bouillé: let us now, for a little, look fixedly at him, till he become a substance and person for us. The man himself is worth a glance; his position and procedure there, in these days, will throw light on many things.

774. For it is with Bouillé as with all French Commanding Officers; only in a more emphatic degree. The grand National Federation, we already guess, was but empty sound, or worse: a last loud-est universal Hep-hep-hurrah, with full bumpers, in that National Lapithæ-feast of Constitution-making; as in loud denial of the palpably existing; as if, with hurrahings, you would shut out notice of the inevitable, already knocking at the gates? Which new National bumper, one may say, can but deepen the drunkenness; and so, the louder it swears Brotherhood, will the sooner and the more surely lead to Cannibalism. Ah, under that fraternal shine and clangor, what a deep world of irreconcilable discords lie momentarily assuaged, damp-down for one moment! Respectable military Federates have barely got home to their quarters; and the inflammablest, "dying, burnt up with liquors and kindness," has not yet got extinct: the shine is hardly out of men's eyes, and still blazes filling all men's memories—when your discords burst forth again, very considerably darker than ever. Let us look at Bouillé, and see how.

775. Bouillé for the present commands in the garrison of Metz, and far and wide over the East and North; being indeed, by a late act of Government with sanction of National Assembly, appointed one of our Four supreme Generals. Rochambeau and Mailly, men and Marshals of note in these days, though to us of small moment, are two of his colleagues; tough old babbling Lückner, also of small moment for us, will probably be the third. Marquis de Bouillé is a determined Loyalist; not indeed disinclined to moderate reform, but resolute against immoderate. A man long suspect to Patriotism; who has more than once given the angust Assembly trouble; who would not, for example, take the National Oath, as he was bound to do, but always put it off on this or the other pretext, till an autograph of Majesty requested him to do it as a favor. There, in this post, if not of honor, yet of eminence and danger, he waits, in a silent concentrated manner; very dubious of the future. "Alone," as he says, or alone, of all the old military Notabilities, he has not emigrated; but thinks always, in atrabiliar moments, that there will be nothing for him too, but to cross the marches. He might cross, say, to Treves or Coblenz, where Exiled Princes will be one day ranking; or say, over into Luxemburg, where old Broglie letters and languishes. Or is there not the great dim Deep of European Diplomacy; where your Calonnes, your Breteuils are beginning to hover, dimly discernible?

776. With immeasurable confused outlooks and purposes, with no clear purpose but this of still trying to do his Majesty a service, Bouillé waits; struggling what he can to keep his district loyal, his troops faithful, his garrisons furnished. He maintains, as yet, with his Cousin Lafayette some thin diplomatic correspondence, by letter and messenger; chivalrous constitutional professions on the one side, military gravity and brevity on the other; which thin correspondence one can see growing ever the thinner and hollower, toward the verge of entire vacuity.* A quick, choleric, sharply discerning, stubbornly endeavoring man: with suppressed-explosive resolution, with valor, may he long audacity: a man who was more in his place, lion-like defending those Windward Isles, or, as with military tiger-spring, clutching Nevis and Montserrat from the English,—than here in this suppressed condition, muzzled and fettered by diplomatic pack-threads; looking out for a civil war, which may never arrive. Few years ago Bouillé was to have led a French East-Indian Expedition, and reconquered or conquered Pondicherry and the Kingdoms of the Sun: but the whole world is suddenly changed, and he with it; Destiny willed it not in that way, but in this.

CHAPTER II.

ARREARS AND ARISTOCRATS.

777. Indeed, as to the general outlook of things, Bouillé himself augurs not well of it. The French Army, ever since those old Bastille days, and earlier, has been universally in the questionables state, and growing daily worse. Discipline, which is at all times a kind of miracle, and works by faith, broke down then; one sees not with what near prospect of recovering itself. The Gardes Françaises played a deadly game; but how they won it, and wear the prizes of it, all men know. In that general overturn, we saw the hired Fighters refuse to fight. The very Swiss of Château-Vieux, which indeed is a kind of French Swiss, from Geneva and the Pays de Vaud, are understood to have declined. Deserters glided over; Royal-Allemand itself looked disconsolate, though stanch of purpose. In a word, we there saw Military Rule, in the shape of poor Besenval with that convulsive unmanageable Camp of his, pass to martyr-days on the Champ-de-Mars; and then, veiling itself, so to speak, “under cloud of night,” depart “down the left bank of the Seine,” to seek refuge elsewhere: this ground having clearly become too hot for it.
775. But what new ground to seek, what remedy to try? Quarters that were “uninfected” this doubtless, with judicious strictness of drilling, were the plan. Alas, in all quarters and places, from Paris onward to the remotest hamlet, is infection, is seditious contagion: inhaled, propagated by contact and converse, till the dullest soldier catch it! There is speech of men in uniform with men not in uniform; men in uniform read journals, and even write in them.* There are public petitions or remonstrances, private emissaries and associations; there is discontent, jealousy, uncertainty, sullen suspicious humor. The whole French Army, fermenting in dark heat, glooms ominous, boding good to no one.

779. So that, in the general social dissolution and revolt, we are to have this deepest and darkest kind of it, a revolting soldiery? Barren, desolate to look upon is this same business of revolt under all its aspects; but how infinitely more so, when it takes the aspect of military mutiny! The very implement of rule and restraint, whereby all the rest was managed and held in order, has become precisely the frightfullest immemorial implement of misrule; like the element of Fire, our indispensable all-ministering servant, when it gets the mastery, and becomes conflagration. Discipline we called a kind of miracle; in fact, is it not miraculous how one man moves hundreds of thousands; each unit of whom, it may be, loves him not, and singly fears him not, yet has to obey him, to go hither or go thither, to march and halt, to give death, and even to receive it, as if a Fate had spoken; and the word-of-command becomes, almost in the literal sense, a magic-word?

780. Which magic-word, again, if it be once forgotten; the spell of it once broken! The legions of assiduous ministering spirits rise on you now as menacing fiends; your free orderly arena becomes a tumult-place of the Nether Pit, and the hapless magician is rent limb from limb. Military mobs are mobs with muskets in their hands, and also with death hanging over their heads, for death is the penalty of disobedience, and they have disobeyed. And now if all mobs are properly frenzies, and work frantically with mad fits of hot and cold, fierce rage alternating so incoherently with panic terror, consider what your military mob will be, with such a conflict of duties and penalties, whirled between remorse and fury, and, for the hot fit, loaded firearms in its hand! To the soldier himself, revolt is frightful, and oftenest perhaps pitiable; and yet so dangerous, it can only be hated, cannot be pitied. An anomalous class of mortals these poor Hired Killers! With a frankness, which to the Moralist in these times seems surprising, they have sworn to become machines; and nevertheless they are still partly men. Let no prudent person in authority remind them of this latter fact; but always let force, let injustice above all, stop short clearly on this side of the rebounding-point! Soldiers, as we often say, do revolt: were it not so, several things which are transient in this world might be perennial.

781. Over and above the general quarrel which all sons of Adam maintain with their lot here below, the grievances of the French soldiery reduce themselves to two. First, that their Officers are Aristocrats; secondly, that they cheat them of their Pay. Two grievances; or rather we might say one, capable of becoming a hundred; for in that single first proposition, that the Officers are Aristocrats, what a multitude of corollaries lie ready! It is a bottomless ever-flowing fountain of grievances this; what you may call a general raw-material of grievance, wherefrom individual grievance after grievance will daily body itself forth. Nay, there will even be a kind of comfort in getting it, from time to time, so embodied. Peculation of one's Pay. It is embodied; made tangible, made denounceable; exhalable, if only in angry words.

782. For unlucky that grand fountain of grievances does exist; Aristocrats almost all our Officers necessarily are; they have it in the blood and bone. By the law of the case no man can pretend to be the pitifuliest lieutenant of militia till he have first verified, to the satisfaction of the Lion-King, a Nobility of four generations. Not nobility only, but four generations of it: this latter is the improvement hit upon, in comparatively late years, by a certain Warminister much pressed for commissions.* An improvement which did relieve the oppressed Warminister, but which split France still further into yawning contrasts of Commonalty and Nobility, nay of new Nobility and old; as if already with your new and old, and then with your old, older and oldest, only in angry words.

783. It is true, in a time of external Peace, when there is no fighting, but only drilling, this question, How you rise from the ranks, may seem theoretical rather. But in reference to the Rights of Man it is continually practical. The soldier has sworn to be faithful not to the King only, but to the Law and the Nation. Do our commanders love the Revolution? ask all soldiers. Unhappily no, they hate it, and love the Counter-Revolution. Young epauleted men, with quality-blood in them, poisoned with quality-pride, do sniff openly, with indignation struggling to become contempt, at our Rights of Man, as at some new-fangled cobweb, which shall be brushed down again. Old Officers, more cautious, keep silent, with closed uncurled lips; but one guesses what is passing within. Nay who knows, how, under the plausiblest word of command, might lie Counter-Revolution itself, sale to Exiled Princes and the Austrian Kaiser; treacherous Aristocrats hoodwinking the small insight of us common men?—In such manner works that general raw-material of grievance; disastrous; instead of trust and reverence, breeding hate, endless suspicion, the impossibility of commanding and obeying. And now when this second more tangible grievance has articulated itself universally in the mind of the common man: Peculation of his Pay! Peculation of the despicablest sort does exist, and has long existed; but unless the new-declared Rights of Man, and all rights whatsoever, be a cobweb, it shall no longer exist.

784. The French Military System seems dying a sorrowful suicidal death. Nay more, citizen, as is natural, ranks himself against citizen in this cause. The soldier finds audience, of numbers and sympathy unlimited, among the Patriot lower-classes. Nor are the higher wanting to the officer. The officer still dresses and perfumes himself for such sad unemigrated soiree as there may still be; and speaks his woes,—which woes, are they not Majesty's and Nature's? Speaks, at the same time, his gay defiance, his firm-set resolution. Citizens, still more Citizenesses, see the right and the wrong; not the Military System alone will die by suicide, but much along with it. As was said, there is yet possible a deeper overturn than any yet witnessed: that deepest turn of the black-burning sulphurous stratum whereon all rests and grows!

785. But how these things may act on the rude soldier-mind, with its military pedantries, its inexperience of all that lies off the parade-ground; inexperience as of a child, yet fierceness of a man, and vehemence of a Frenchman! It is long that secret communings in mess-room and guard-room, sour looks, thousandfold petty vexations between commander and commanded, measure everywhere the weary military day. Ask Captain Dampmartin; an authentic, ingenious literary officer of horse; who loves the Reign of Liberty, after a sort; yet has had his heart grieved to the quick many times, in the hot South-Western region and elsewhere; and has seen riot, civil battle by daylight and by torchlight, and anarchy hatefuler than death. How insubordinate Troopers, with drink in their heads, meet Captain Dampmartin and another on the ramparts, where there is no escape or side-path; and make military salute punctually, for we look calm on them; yet make it in a snappish, almost insulting manner; how one morning they “leave all their chamois-shirts” and superfluous buffs, which they are tired of, laid in piles at the Captains' doors; whereas “we laugh,” as the ass does eating thistles: may they “knot two forage-cords together,” with universal noisy cursing, with evident intent to hang the Quarter-master—all this the worthy Captain, looking on it through the ruddy-and-sable of fond regretful memory, has flowingly written down. Men growl in vague discontent; officers fling up their commissions and emigrate in disgust.

786. Or let us ask another literary Officer; not yet Captain; Sublieutenant only, in the Artillery Regiment La Fère: a young man of twenty-one; not unentitled to speak; the name of him is Napoleon Bonaparte. To such height of Sublieutenancy has he now got promoted, from Brienne School, five years ago; “being found qualified in mathematics by La Place.” He is lying at Auxonne, in the West, in these months; not sumptuously lodged—“in the house of a Barber, to whose wife he did not pay the customary degree of respect;” or even over at the Pavillon, in a chamber with bare walls; the only furniture an indifferent bed without curtains, two chairs, and in the recess of a window a table covered with books and papers; his Brother Louis sleeps on a coarse mattress in an adjoining room.” However, he is doing something great: writing his first Book or Pamphlet,—eloquent vehement Letter to M. Matteo Buttafuoco,” our Corsican Deputy, who is not a Patriot, but an Aristocrat unworthy of Deputation. Joly of Dole is Publisher. The literary Sublieutenant corrects the proofs: “sets out on foot from Auxonné every morning at four o’clock, for Dole: after looking over the proofs, he partakes of an extremely frugal breakfast with Joly, and immediately prepares for returning to his Garrison; where he arrives before noon, having thus walked above twenty miles in the course of the morning.

787. This Sublieutenant can remark that, in drawing-rooms, on streets, on highways, at inns, everywhere men’s minds are ready to kindle into a flame. That a Patriot, if he appear in the drawing-room, or amid a group of officers, is liable enough to be discouraged, so great is the majority against him; but no sooner does he get into the street, or among the soldiers, than he feels again as if the whole Nation were with him. That after the famous Oath, “To the King, to the Nation, and Law,” there was a great change; that before this, if ordered to fire on the people, he for one would have done it in the King’s name; but that after this, in the Nation’s name, he would not have done it. Likewise that the Patriot officers, more numerous too in the Artillery and Engineers than elsewhere, were few in number; yet that having the soldiers on their side, they ruled the regiment; and did often deliver the Aristocrat brother officer out of peril and strait. One day, for example, “a member of our own mess roused the mob, by singing, from the windows of our dining-room, ‘O Richard, O my King; and I had to snatch him from their fury.”

788. All which let the reader multiply by 10,000; and spread it with slight variations, over all the camps and garrisons of France. The French Army seems on the verge of universal mutiny.

789. Universal mutiny! There is in that what may well make Patriot Constitutionalism and an august Assembly shudder. Something behoves to be done; yet what to do no man can tell. Mirabeau proposes even that the Soldiery, having come to such a pass, be forthwith disbanded, the whole Two Hundred and Eighty Thousand of them; and organized anew.† Impossible this, in so sudden a manner! cry all men. And yet literally, answer we, it is inevitable, in one manner or another. Such an army, with its four-generation Nobles, its peculated Pay, and men knotting forage-cords to hang their Quartermaster, cannot subsist beside such a Revolution. Your alternative is a slow-pining chronic dissolution.

and new organization; or a swift decisive one; the agonies spread over years, or concentrated into an hour. With a Mirabeau for Minister or Governor, the latter had been the choice; with no Mirabeau for Governor, it will naturally be the former.

CHAPTER III.

BOUILLE AT METZ.

790. To Bouillé, in his North-Eastern circle, none of these things are altogether hid. Many times flight over the marches gleam out on him as a last guidance in such bewilderment; nevertheless he continues here; striving always to hope the best, not from new organization, but from happy Counter-Revolution and return to the old. For the rest, it is clear to him that this same National Federation, and universal swearing and fraternizing of People and Soldiers, has done "incalculable mischief." So much that fermented secretly has hereby got vent, and become open: National Guards and Soldiers of the line, solemnly embracing one another on all parade-fields, drinking, swearing patriotic oaths, fall into disorderly street-processions, constitutional unmilitary exclamations, and hurrying. On which account the Regiment Picardie, for one, has to be drawn out in the square of the barracks, here at Metz, and sharply harangued by the General himself; but expresses penitence.*

* Bouillé, "Mémoires," i. 113.

BOUILLE AT METZ.

791. Far and near, as accounts testify, insubordination has begun grumbling louder and louder. Officers have been seen shut up in their mess-rooms; assaulted with clamorous demands, not without menaces. The insubordinate ringleader is dismissed with "yellow furlough," yellow infamous thing they call cartouche jaune; but ten new ringleaders rise in his stead, and the yellow cartouche ceases to be thought disgraceful. "Within a fortnight," or at furthest a month, of that sublime Feast of Pikes, the whole French Army, demanding Arrears, forming Reading Clubs, frequenting Popular Societies, is in a state which Bouillé can call by no name but that of mutiny. Bouillé knows it as few do; and speaks by dire experience. Take one instance instead of many.

792. It is still an early day of August, the precise date now undiscoverable, when Bouillé, about to set out for the waters of Aix-la-Chapelle, is once more suddenly summoned to the barracks of Metz. The soldiers stand ranged in fighting order, muskets loaded, the officers all there on compulsion; and required with many-voiced emphasis to have their arrears paid. Picardie was penitent; but we see it has relapsed: the wide space bristles and lours with mere mutinous armed men. Brave Bouillé advances to the nearest Regiment, opens his commanding lips to harangue; obtains nothing but querulous-ignignant discordance, and the sound of so many thousand livres legally due. The moment is trying; there are some 10,000 soldiers now in Metz, and one spirit seems to have spread among them.
793. Bouillé is firm as the adamant; but what shall he do? A German Regiment, named of Salm, is thought to be of better temper: nevertheless Salm too many have heard of the precept, "Thou shalt not steal," Salm too may know that money is money. Bouillé walks trustfully toward the Regiment de Salm, speaks trustful words; but here again is answered by the cry of forty-four thousand livres odd sous. A cry waxing more and more vociferous, as Salm's humor mounts; which cry, as it will produce no cash or promise of cash, ends in the wide simultaneous whirr of shouldered muskets, and a determined quick-time march on the part of Salm—toward its Colonel's house, in the next street, there to seize the colors and military chest. Thus does Salm, for its part; strong in the faith that meum is not tuum, that fair speeches are not forty-four thousand livres odd sous.

794. Unrestrainable! Salm tramps to military time, quick consuming the way. Bouillé and the officers, drawing sword, have to dash into double-quick pas-de-charge, or unmilitary running; to get the start; to station themselves on the outer staircase, and stand there with what of death-defiance and sharp steel they have; Salm truculently coiling itself up, rank after rank, opposite them, in such humor as we can fancy, which happily has not yet mounted to the murder-pitch. There will Bouillé stand, certain at least of one man's purpose: in grim calmness, awaiting the issue. What the intrepidest of men and generals can do is done. Bouillé, though there is a barricading picket at each end of the street, and death under his eyes, contrives to send for a Dragoon Regiment with orders to charge: the dragoon officers mount; the dragoon men will not: hope is none there for him. The street, as we say, barricaded; the Earth all shut out, only the indifferent heavenly Vault overhead: perhaps here or there a timorous householder peering out of window, with prayer for Bouillé; copious Rascality, on the pavement, with prayer for Salm: there do the two parties stand,—like chariots locked in a narrow thoroughfare; like locked wrestlers at a dead-grip! For two hours they stand: Bouillé's sword glittering in his hand, adamantine resolution clouding his brow: for two hours by the docks of Metz. Moody-silent stands Salm, with occasional clangor; but does not fire. Rascality, from time to time, urges some grenadier to level his musket at the General; who looks on it as a bronze general would: and always some corporal or other strikes it up.

795. In such remarkable attitude, standing on that staircase for two hours, does brave Bouillé, long a shadow, dawn on us visibly out of the dimness, and become a person. For the rest, since Salm has not shot him at the first instant, and since in himself there is no variableness, the danger will diminish. The Mayor, "a man infinitely respectable," with his Municipals and tricolor sashes, finally gains entrance; remonstrates, perorates, promises; gets Salm persuaded home to its barracks. Next day, our respectable Mayor lending the money, the officers pay down the half of the demand in ready cash. With which liquidation Salm pacifies itself; and for the present all is hushed up, as much as may be."

796. Such scenes as this of Metz, or preparations and demonstrations toward such, are universal over France; Dampmartin, with his knotted forage-cords and piled chamois-jackets, is at Strasburg, in the South-East; in those same days or rather nights, Royal Champagne is "shouting Vive la Nation, au diable les Aristocrats, with some thirty lit candles," at Hesdin, on the far North-West. "The garrison of Bitche," Deputy Rewbell is sorry to state, "went out of the town with drums beating; deposed its officers; and then returned into the town, saber in hand."† Ought not a National Assembly to occupy itself with these objects? Military France is everywhere full of sour inflammatory humor, which exhalas itself fuliginously, this way or that; a whole continent of smoking-flax; which, blown on here or there by any angry wind, might so easily start into a blaze, into a continent of fire. 797. Constitutional Patriotism is in deep natural alarm at these things. The august Assembly sits diligently deliberating: dare nowise resolve, with Mirabeau, on an instantaneous disbandment and extinction; findsthat a course of palliatives is easier. But at least and lowest, this grievance of the Arrears shall be rectified. A plan much noiseid in those days, under the name "Decree of the Sixth of August," has been devised for that. Inspectors shall visit all armies: and, with certain elected cor-

798. We are to remark, however, that of all districts, this of Bouillé's seems the inflammablist. It was always to Bouillé and Metz that royalty would fly: Austria lies near; here more than elsewhere must the disunited People look over the borders, into a dim sea of Foreign Politics and Diplomacies, with hope or apprehension, with mutual exasperation. 799. It was but in these days that certain Austrian troops, marching peaceably across an angle of this region, seemed an Invasion realized; and there rushed toward Stenai, with musket on shoulder, from all the winds, some thirty thousand National Guards, to inquire what the matter was. A matter of mere diplomacy it proved; the Austrian Kaiser, in haste to get to Belgium, had bargained for this short cut. The infinite dim movement of European Politics waved a skirt over these spaces, passing on its way; like the passing shadow of a condor; and such a winged flight of thirty thousand, with mixed cackling and crowing rose in consequence! For, in addition to all; this people, as we said, is much divided: Aristocrats abound; Patriotism has both Aristocrats and Austrians to watch. It is Lorraine, this region; not so illuminated as old France; it remembers ancient Feudalisms; nay within man's memory it had a Court and King of its own, or indeed the splendor of a Court and King, without the burden. Then, contrariwise, the Mother Society, which sits in the Jacobins Church at Paris, has Daughters in the Towns here; shrill-tongued, driven acid: consider how the memory of good King Stanislaus, and ages of Imperial Feudalism, may comport with this New acid Evangel, and what a virulence of discord there may be! In all which, the Soldiery officers on one side, private men on the other, takes art, and now indeed principal part; a Soldiery, moreover, all the hotter here as it lies the denser, the frontier Province requiring more of it.

800. So stands Lorraine: but the capital City more especially so. The pleasant City of Nanci, which faded Feudalism loves, where King Stanislaus personally dwelt and shone, has an Aristocrat Municipality, and then also a Daughter Society: it has some 40,000 divided souls of population; and three large Regiments, one of which is Swiss Château-Vieux
dear to Patriotism ever since it refused fighting, or was thought to refuse, in the Bastille days. Here unhappily all evil influences seem to meet con-centered, here, of all places, may jealousy and heat evolve itself.
These many months, accordingly, man has been set against man, Washed against Unwashed; Patriot Soldier against Aristocrat Captain, ever the more bitterly: and a long score of grudges has been running up.

801. Namable grudges, and likewise unnamable:
for there is a punctual nature in Wrath; and daily,
were there but glances of the eye, tones of the voice,
and minutest commissions or omissions, it will jot down somewhat, to accounts, under the head of sundries, which always swells the sum-total. For example, in April last, in those times of preliminary Federation, when National Guards and Soldiers were everywhere swearing brotherhood, and all France was locally federating, preparing for the National Feast of Pikes, it was observed that these Nanci Officers threw cold water on the whole brotherly business; that they first hung back from appearing at the Nanci Federation; then did appear, but in mere rédingote and undress, with scarcely a clean shirt on; nay that one of them, as the National Colors flaunted by in that solemn moment, did, without visi-able necessity, take occasion to spit.

802. Small "sundries as er journal," but then incessant ones! The Aristocrat Municipality, pretending to be Constitutional, keeps mostly quiet; not so the Daughter of Society, the 5,000 adult male Patrios of the place, still less than 5,000 females; not so the young, whiskered or whiskerless, four-generation

Roi, hot troopers of Mestre-de-Camp! Walled Nan­ci, which stands so bright and trim, with its straight streets, spacious squares, and Stainslau's Architecture, on the fruitful alluvium of the Meurthe; so bright, amid the yellow corn-fields in these Reaper-Months,—is inwardly but a den of discord, anxiety, inflammability, not far from exploding. Let Bouillé look to it. If that universal military heat, which we liken to a vast continent of smoking flax, do anywhere take fire, his beard, here in Lorraine and Nan­ci, may the most readily of all get singed by it.

803. Bouillé, for his part, is busy enough, but only with the general superintendence; getting his paci­fied Salm, and all other still tolerable Regiments, marched out of Metz, to Southward towns and vil­lages; to rural Cantonments as at Vic, Marsal and thereabout, by the still waters; where is plenty of horse-forage, sequestered parade-ground, and the soldier’s speculative faculty can be stifled by drilling.

Salm, as we said, received only half payment of ar­rears; naturally not without grumbling. Neverthe­less that scene of the drawn sword may, after all, have raised Bouillé in the mind of Salm; for men and soldiers love intrepidity and swift inflexible de­cision, even when they suffer by it. As indeed is not this fundamentally the quality of qualities for a man? A quality which by itself is next to nothing, since inferior animals, asses, dogs, even mules have it; yet, in due combination, it is the indispensable basis of all.

804. Of Nanci and its heats, Bouillé, commander of the whole, knows nothing special: understands generally that the troops in that City are perhaps the worst. The Officers there have it all, as they have long had it, to themselves; and unhappily seem to manage it ill. “Fifty yellow furloughs,” given out in one batch, do surely betoken difficulties. But what was Patriotism to think of certain light-fenc­ing Fusileers “set on,” or supposed to be set on, “to insult the Grenadier-club,—considerate speculative Grenadiers and that reading-room of theirs? With shoutings, with hootings; till the speculative Grena­dier drew his side-arms too; and there ensued bat­tery and duels! Nay more, are not swashbucklers of the same stamp “sent out” visibly, or sent out presumably, now in the dress of Soldiers, to pick quar­rels with the Citizens; now, disguised as Citizens, to pick quarrels with the Soldiers? For a certain Roussière, expert in fence, was taken in the very fact; four Officers (presumably of tender years) hounding him on, who thereupon fled precipitately! Fence-master Roussière, haled to the guard-house, and sentence of three months’ imprisonment: but his comrades demanded “yellow furlough” for him of all persons; nay thereafter they produced him on parade; capped him in paper-helmet, inscribed Isca­riot; marched him to the gate of the City; and there sternly commanded him to vanish forevermore.

805. On all which suspicions, accusations, and noisy procedure, and on enough of the like continually accumulating, the Officer could not but look with disdainful indignation; perhaps disdainfully express

* Bouillé, i. c. 9.
the same in words, and "soon after fly over to the Austrians."

806. So that when it here, as elsewhere, comes to the question of Arrears, the humor and procedure is of the bitterest: Regiment Mestre-de-Camp getting amid loud clamor, some three gold louis a-man,—
which have, as usual, to be borrowed from the Mu-unicipality; Swiss Château-Vieux applying for the like,
but getting instead instantaneous courrois, or cat-o'- ine-tails, with subsequent insufferable hisses from the women and children: Regiment du Roi, sick of hope deferred, at length seizing its military chest, and marching it to quarters, but next day marching
it back again, through streets all struck silent,—un-ordered parading and clamors, not without strong liquor: obligation, insubordination; your military ranked Arrangement going all (as the Typographers say of set types, in a similar case) rapidly to pie.******

807. Constitutional Patriotism, at Paris and elsewhere, may well quake at the news. War-Minister Latour du Pin runs breathless to the National Assembly, with a written message that "all is burning, tout brûle, tout presse." The National Assembly, on the spur of the instant, renders such Decret, and "order to submit and repent," as he requires; if it will avail anything. On the other hand, Journalism, through all its throats, gives hoarse outcry, condemnatory, elegiac-applausive. The Forty-eight

CHAPTER V.

INSPECTOR MALSEIGNE.

Of Inspector Malseigne we discern, by direct light, that he is "of Herculean stature;" and infer, with probability, that he is of tranquil-mustached aspect,—for Royalist Officers now leave the upper lip unshaven; that he is of indomitable bull-heart; and also, unfortunately, of thick bull-head.

On Tuesday, the 24th of August, 1790, he opens session as Inspecting Commissioner; meets those "elected corporals, and soldiers that can write." He finds the accounts of Château-Vieux to be complex; to require delay and reference: he takes to haranguing, to reprimanding; ends amid audible grumbling. Next morning, he resumes session, not at the town-hall as prudent Municipals counselled, but once more at the barracks. Unfortunately Château-Vieux, grumbling all night, will now hear of no delay or reference; from reprimanding on his part, it goes to bullying,—answered with continual cries of "Jugez tout de suite (Judge it at once);" whereupon M. de Malseigne will off in a huff. But lo, Château-Vieux, swarming all about the barracks-court, has sentries at every gate; M. de Malseigne, demanding egress, cannot get it, not though Commandant Denoue backs him, can get only "Jugez tout de suite." Here is a nodus!

Bull-hearted M. de Malseigne draws his sword; and will force egress. Confused splutter. M. de Malseigne's sword breaks: he snatches Commandant Denoue's: the sentry is wounded. M. de Mal-seigne, whom one is loth to kill, does force egress,—followed by Château-Vieux all in disarray: a spectacle to Nanci. M. de Malseigne walks at a sharp pace, yet never runs; wheeling from time to time, with menaces and movements of fence; and so reaches Denoue's house, unharmed; which house Château-Vieux, in an agitated manner invests,—hindered as yet from entering, by a crowd of officers formed on the staurous. M. de Malseigne retreats by back ways to the Town-hall, flustered though undaunted; amid an escort of National Guards. From the Town-hall he, on the morrow, emits fresh orders, fresh plans of settlement with Château-Vieux; to none of which will Château-Vieux listen: whereupon he finally, amid noise enough, emits order that Château-Vieux shall march on the morrow morning, and quarter at Sarre Louis. Château-Vieux flatly refuses marching; M. de Malseigne "takes act," due notarial protest, of such refusal,—if happily that may avail him.

This is the end of Thursday; and, indeed, of M. de Malseigne's Inspectorship, which has lasted some fifty hours. ... du Roi hang, as it were, fluttering; Château-Vieux is olean gone, in what way we see. Over-night, an Aid-de-Camp of Lafayette's, stationed here for such emergency, sends swift emissaries far and wide to summon National Guards. The slumber of the country is broken by clattering hoofs, by loud fraternal knockings; everywhere the Constitutional Patriot must clutch his fighting-gear, and take the road for Nanci.

813. And thus the Herculean Inspector has sat all Thursday, among terror-struck Municipals, a center of confused noise: all Thursday, Friday and till Saturday toward noon. Château-Vieux, in spite of the notarial protest, will not march a step. As many as 4,000 National Guards are dropping or pouring in, uncertain what is expected of them, still more uncertain what will be obtained of them. For all is uncertainty, commotion, and suspicion: there goes a word that Bouillé, beginning to bestir himself in the rural Cantonments eastward, is but a Royalist traitor; that Château-Vieux and Patriotism are sold to Austria, of which latter M. de Malseigne is probably some agent. Mestre-de-Camp and Roi flutter still more questionably: Château-Vieux, far from marching, "waves red flags out of two carriages," in a passionate manner, along the streets; and next morning answers its Officers: "Pay us, then; and we will march with you to the world's end!"

814. Under which circumstances, toward noon on Saturday, M. de Malseigne thinks it were good perhaps to inspect the ramparts,—on horseback. He mounts, accordingly, with escort of three troopers. At the gate of the City, he bids two of them wait for his return; and with the third, a trooper to be depended upon, he—gallops off for Lunéville; where lies a certain Carbineer Regiment not yet in a mutinous state! The two left troopers soon get uneasy; discover how it is, and give the alarm. Mestre-de-Camp, to the number of a hundred, saddles in franc-tic haste, as if sold to Austria; gallops out pell-mell in chase of its Inspector. And so they spur, and the Inspector spurs; careering, with noise and jingle, up the valley of the River Meurthe, toward Lunéville and the midday sun: through an astonished country; indeed almost to their own astonishment.

815. What a hunt; Actaeon-like:—which Actaeon de Malseigne happily gatins. To arms, ye Carbineers of Lunéville: to chastise mutinous men, insulting your General Officers; insulting your own quarters; —above all things, fire soon, lest there be parleying and ye refuse to fire! The Carbineers fire soon, exploding upon the first strugglers of Mestre-de-Camp; who shriek at the very flash, and fall back hastily on Nanci, in a state not far from distraction. Panic and fury; sold to Austria without an if; so much per regiment, the very sums can be specified; and traitorous Malseigne is fled! Help, O Heaven; help, thou Earth;—ye unwashed Patriots; ye too are sold like us!

816. Effervescent Regiment du Roi primes its firelocks, Mestre-de-Camp saddles wholly: Commandant Denoue is seized, is flung in prison with a "canvas-shirt (sarreau de toile)" about him: Château-Vieux burst up the magazines; distributes "3,000 fusils" to a Patriot people: Austria shall have a hot bargain. Alas, the unhappy hunting-dogs, as we said, have hunted away their huntsman; and do now run howling and baying, on what trail they know not; nigh rabid!

817. And so there is tumultuous march of men, through the night: with halt on the heights of Flinval, whence Lunéville can be seen all illuminated.

Then there is parley, at four in the morning; and re-parley; finally there is agreement; the Carbineers gave in; Malseigne is surrendered, with apologies on all sides. After weary confused hours, he is even got under way; the Lunévillers all turning out, in the idle Sunday—see such departure: home-going of mutinous Mestre-de-Camp with its Inspector captive. Mestre-de-Camp accordingly marches; the Lunévillers look. See! at the corner of the first street, our Inspector bounds off again, bull-hearted as he is; amid the slash of sabers, the crackle of musketry; and escapes, full gallop, with only a ball-lodged in his buff-jerkin. The Herculean man! And yet it is an escape to no purpose. For the Carbineers, to whom after the hardest Sunday's ride on record, he has come circling back, "stand deliberating by their nocturnal watch-fires; deliberating of Austria, of traitors, and the rage of Mestre-de-Camp.

So that, on the whole, the next sight we have is that of M. de Malseigne, on the Monday afternoon, fating bull-hearted through the streets of Nanci; in open carriage, a soldier standing over him with drawn sword; amid the "furies of the women," hedges of National Guards, and confusion of Babel: to the Prison beside Commandant Denoue! That finally is the lodging of Inspector Malseigne.*

818. Surely it is time Bouillé were drawing near.
The Country all round, alarmed with watch-fires, illuminated towns, and marching and rout, has been

BOUILLÉ AT NANCY.

819. Hasten with help, thou brave Bouillé: if swift help come not, all is now verily "burning;" and may burn,—to what lengths and breadths! Much, in these hours depends on Bouillé; as it shall now fare with him, the whole future may be this way or be that.
If, for example, he were to loiter dubitating, and not come; if he were to come, and fail; the whole Soldiery of France to blaze into mutiny, National Guard going some this way, some that; and Royalism to draw its rapier, and Sansculottism to snatch its pike; and the Spirit of Jacobinism, as yet young, girt with sun-rays, to grow instantaneously mature,
grit with hell-fire,—as mortals, in one night of deadly crises, have had their heads turned gray!

820. Brave Bouillé is advancing fast, with the old inflexibility; gathering himself, unhappily "in small influences," from East, from West and North; and now on Tuesday morning, the last day of the month,
he stands all concentrated, unhappily still in small force, at the village of Fromarde, within some few miles. Son of Adam with a more dubious task before him is not in the world this Tuesday morning. A weltering inflammable sea of doubt and peril, and Bouillé sure of simply one thing, his own determination. Which one thing, indeed, may be worth many. He puts a most firm face on the matter: "Submission, or unsparing battle and destruction; twenty-four hours to make your choice;" this was the tenor of his Proclamation; thirty copies of which he sent yesterday to Nanci:—all which, we find, were intercepted and not posted. 821. Nevertheless, at half-past eleven this morning, seemingly by way of answer, there does wait on him at Fronarde some Deputation from the mutinous Regiments, from the Nanci Municipals, to see what can be done. Bouillé receives this Deputation "in a large open court adjoining his lodging:" pacified Salm, and the rest, attend also, being invited to do it,—all happily still in the right humor. The Mutineers pronounce themselves with a decisiveness, which to Bouillé seems insolence; and happily to Salm also. Salm, forgetful of the Metz staircase and saber, demands that the scoundrels "be hanged" there and then. Bouillé represses the hanging; but answers that mutinous Soldiers have one course, and not more than one: To liberate, with heartfelt contrition, Messieurs Denoue and De Malseigne; to get ready forthwith for marching off, whither he shall order; and "submit and repent," as the National Assembly has decreed, as he yesterday did in thirty printed placards proclaim. These are his terms, unalterable as the decrees of Destiny. Which terms as they, the Mutineer deputies, seemingly do not accept, it were good for them to vanish from this spot, and even to do it promptly; with him too, in few instants, the word will be, Forward! The Mutineer deputies vanish, not unpromptly: the Municipal ones anxious beyond right for their own individualities, prefer abiding with Bouillé.

822. Brave Bouillé, though he puts a most firm face on the matter, knows his position full well: how at Nanci, what with rebellious soldiers, with uncertain National Guards, and so many distributed fusils, their rage and roar some 10,000 fighting men; while with himself is scarcely the third part of that number, in National Guards also uncertain, in more pacified Regiments,—for the present, full of rage, and clamor to march; but whose rage and clamor may next moment take such a fatal new figure. On the top of one uncertain billow, therewith to calm billows! Bouillé muses "abandon himself to Fortune," who is said sometimes to favor the brave. At half-past twelve, the Mutineer deputies having vanished, our drums beat; we march; for Nanci! Let Nanci bethink itself, then; for Bouillé has thought and determined.

823. And yet how shall Nanci think; not a City but a Bedlam! Grim Château-Vieux is for defense to the death; forces the Municipality to order, by tap of drum, all citizens acquainted with artillery to turn out, and assist in managing the cannon. On the other hand, effervescent Regiment du Roi is drawn up in its barracks: quite disconsolate, hearing the humor Salm is in, and ejaculates doefully from its... thousand throats: "La loi, la loi!" Mestre-de-Camp blusters, with profane swearing, in mixed terror and furor; National Guards look this way and that, not knowing what to do. What a Bedlam-City: as many plans as heads; all ordering, one obeying: quiet none,—except the Dead, who sleep underground, having done their fighting.

824 And, behold, Bouillé proves as good as his word: "at half-past two" scouts report that he is within half a league of the gates; rattling along, with cannon and array; breathing nothing but destruction. A new Deputation, Municipal, Munitioners, Officers, goes out to meet him; with passionate entreaty for yet one other hour. Bouillé grants an hour. Then, at the end thereof, no Denoue or Mal-seigne appearing as promised, he rolls his drums, and again takes the road. Toward four o'clock the terror-struck Townsmen may see him face to face.
His cannons rattle there, in their carriages; his vanguard is within thirty paces of the Gate Stanislaus.
Onward like a Bluet, by appointed times, by law of Nature! What next? Lo, flag of truce and chamade, conjuration to halt: Malseigne and Denoue are on the street, coming hither; the soldiers all repenting, ready to submit and march! Adamantine Bouillé's lock alters not; yet the word Halt is given:
gladder moment he never saw. Joy of joys! Mal-seigne and Denoue do verily issue; escorted by National Guards; from streets all frantic, with sale to Àustria and so forth: they salute Bouillé, unscathed. Bouillé steps aside to speak with them, and with other heads of the Town there; having already ordered by what Gates and Routes the mutineer Regiments shall file out.

825. Such colloquy with these two General Officers and other principal Townsmen was natural enough; nevertheless one wishes Bouillé had postponed it, and as of stepped it, and as of stepped it, and as of stepped it, and as of stepped it, and as of stepped it, and as of stepped it, and as of stepped it, and as of stepped it. Such tumultuous inflammable masses, tumbling along, making way for each other; this of keen nitrous oxide, that of sulphurous fire-damp,—were it not well to stand between them, keeping them well separate, till the space be cleared? Numerous stragglers of Château-Vieux and the rest have not marched with their main columns, which are filing out by their appointed Gates, taking station in the open meadows. National Guards are in a state of nearly distracted uncertainty; the populace, armed and unarmed, roll openly delirious,—betrayed, sold to the Austrians, sold to the Aristocrats. There are loaded cannon, with lit matches, among them, and Bouillé's vanguard is halted within thirty paces of the Gate. Command dwells not in that mad inflammable mass; which smolders and tumbles there, in blind smoky rage; which will not open the Gate when summoned; says it will open the cannon's throat sooner!—Cannonade not, O Friends, or be it through my body! cries heroic young Desilles, young Captain of Roi, clasping the murderous engine in his arms, and holding it. Château-Vieux Swiss, by main force, with oaths and menaces, wrench off the heroic youth; who undaunted, amid still louder oaths, seats himself on the touch-hole. Amid still louder oaths, with ever louder clanger,—and, alas, with the loud crackle
of first one, and then of three other muskets; which explode into his body; which roll it in the dust,—and do also, in the loud madness of such moment, bring lit cannon-match to ready priming: and so, with one thunderous belch of grape shot, blast some fifty of Bouillé's vanguard into air!

826. Fatal! That sputter of the first musket-shot has kindled such a cannon-shot, such a death-blaze; and all is now red-hot madness, conflagration as of Tophet. With demoniac rage, the Bouillé vanguard storms through that Gate Stanislaus; with fiery sweep sweeps Mutiny clear away, to death, or into shelters and cellars, from which latter, again, Mutiny continues firing. The ranked Regiments hear it in their meadow; they rush back again through the nearest Gate; Bouillé gallops in, distracted, inaudible,—and now has begun in Nanci, as in that doomed Hall of the Nibelungen, "a murder grim and great."827. Miserable: such scene of dismal aimless madness as the auger of Heaven but rarely permit among men!

From cellar or from garret, from open street in front, from successive corners of cross-streets on each hand, Château-Vieux and Patriotism keep up the murderous rolling-fire, on murderous not unpatriotic fires. Your blue National Captain, riddled with balls, one hardly knows on whose side fighting, requests to be laid on the colors to die: the patriotic Woman (name not given, deed surviving) screams to Château-Vieux that it must not fire the other cannon; and even flings a pail of water on it, since screaming avail not. Thou shalt fight; thou shalt not fight; and with whom shalt thou fight! Could tumult awaken the old Dead, Burgundian Charles the Bold might stir from under that Rotunda of his: never since he, raging, sank in the ditches, and lost Life and Diamond, was such a noise heard here.

828. Three thousand, as some count, lie mangled, gory: the half of Château-Vieux has been shot, without need of Court-Martial. Cavalry, of Mestre-de-Camp, or their foes, can do little. Regiment du Roi was persuaded to its barracks; stands there palpitating. Bouillé, armed with the terrors of the Law, and favored of Fortune, finally triumphs. In two murderous hours, he has penetrated to the grand Squares dauntless, though with loss of forty officers and 500 men: the shattered remnants of Château-Vieux are seeking covert. Regiment du Roi, not effervescent, now, alas no, but having effervesced, will offer to ground its arms; will "march in a quarter of an hour." Nay these poor effervesced require "escort" to march with, and get it; though they are thousands strong, and have thirty ball-cartridges a man!

The Sun is not yet down, when Peace, which might have come bloodless, has come bloody; the mutinous Regiments are on march, doleful, on their three Routes; and from Nanci rises wail of women and men, the voice of weeping and desolation; the City weeping for its slain who awaken not. These streets are empty but for victorious patrols.

829. Thus has Fortune, favoring the brave, dragged Bouillé, as himself says, out of such a frightful peril "by the hair of the head." An intrepid adamantine man, this Bouillé;—had he stood in old Broglie's place in those Bastille days, it might have been all different! He has extinguished mutiny, and immeasurable civil war. Not for nothing, as we see; yet at a rate which he and Constitutional Patriotism consider cheap. Nay, as for Bouillé, he, urged by subsequent contradiction which arose, declares coldly, it was rather against his own private mind, and more by public military rule of duty, that he did extinguish it—immeasurable civil war being now the only chance. Urged, we say, by subsequent contradiction! Civil war, indeed, is Chaos; and in all vital Chaos there is new order shaping itself free, but what a faith this, that of all new Orders out of Chaos and Possibility of Man and his Universe, Louis Sixteenth and Two-Chamber Monarchy were precisely the one that would shape itself! It is like undertaking to throw deuce-ace, say only five hundred successive times, and any other throw to be fatal—for Bouillé. Rather thank Fortune and Heaven, always, thou intrepid Bouillé; and let contradiction go its way! Civil war, conflagrating universally over France at this moment, might have led to one thing or to another thing; meanwhile, to quench conflagration, wheresoever one finds it, wheresoever one can: this, in all times, is the rule for man and General Officer.

At sound and sight of which things, if not War-Minister Latour, yet "Adored Minister" Necker sees good, on the 3d of September, 1790, to withdraw softly, almost privily, with an eye to the "recovery of his health." Home to native Switzerland; not as he last came; lucky to reach it alive! Fifteen months ago, we saw him coming, with escort of horse, with sound of clarion and trumpet; and now, at Arcis-sur-Aube, while he departs, unescorted soundless, the Populace and Municipals stop him as * Ami du Peuple (in "Histoire Parlamentaire" ubi supra).
a fugitive, are not unlike massacreing him as a traitor; the National Assembly, consulted on the matter, gives him free egress as a nullity. Such an unstable "drift-mold of Accident" is the substance of this lower world, for them that dwell in houses of clay; so, especially in hot regions and times, do the proudest palaces we build of it take wings, and become Sahara sand-palaces, spinning many-pillared in the whirlwind, and bury us under their sand!—

831. In spite of the 40,000, the National Assembly persists in its thanks; and Royalist Latour du Pin continues Minister. The 40,000 assembled next day, as loud as ever; roll toward Latour's Hotel; find cannon on the porch-steps with flambeau lit; and have to retire elsewhere, and digest their spleen, or reabsorb it into the blood.

832. Over in Lorraine meanwhile, they of the distributed fusils, ringleaders of Mestre-de-Camp, of Roi, have got marked out for judgment yet shall never get judged. Briefer is the doom of Château-Vieux, Château-Vieux is, by Swiss law, given up for instant trial in Court-Martial of its own officers. Which Court-Martial, with all brevity (in not many hours) has hanged some Twenty-three, on conspicuous gibbets; marched some Three-score in chains to the Galleys; and so, to appearance, finished the matter off. Hanged men do cease forever from this Earth, but out of chains and the Galleys there may be resurrection in triumph. Resuscitation for the chained Hero; and even for the chained Scoundrel or Semi-scoundrel! Scottish John Knox, such World-Hero as we know, sat once nevertheless pulling grim-

833. But indeed at Nanci generally, Aristocracy rides triumphant, rough. Bonillé is gone again, the second day; in Aristocrat Municipality, with free course, is as cruel as it had before been cowardly. The Daughter Society, as the mother of the whole mischief, lies ignominiously suppressed; the Prisons can hold no more; bereaved down-beaten Patriotism murmurs, not loud but deep. Here and in the neighboring Towns, "flattened balls" picked from the streets of Nanci are worn at button-holes: balls flattened in carrying death to Patriotism; men wear them there, in perpetual memento of revenge. Mutineer deserters roam the woods; have to demand charity at the musket's end. All is dissolution, mutual rancor, gloom and despair:—till National Assembly Commissioners arrive, with a steady gentle flame of Constitutionalism in their hearts; who gently lift up the down-trodden, gently pull down the too uplifted; reinstate the Daughter Society, recall the mutineer deserter; gradually leveling, strive in all wise ways to smooth and soothe. With such gradual mild leveling on the one side; as with solemn funeral-service, cassolettes, Courts-Martial, National thanks, on the other,—all that Officiality can do is done. The button-hole will drop its flat ball; the black ashes, as far as many be, get green again.

* Knox's "History of the Reformation," b. i.
824. This is the "Affair of Nanci," by some called the "Massacre of Nanci;"—properly speaking, the unsightly wrong-side of that thrice-glorious Feast of Fikes, the right-side of which formed a spectacle for the very gods. Right-side and wrong lie always so near: the one was in July, in August the other! Theaters, the theaters over in London, are bright with their pasteboard simulacrum of that "Federation of the French people," brought out as Drama: this of Nanci, we may say, though not played in any pasteboard Theater, did for many months enact itself, and even walk spectrally, in all French heads. For the news of it fly pealing through all France: awakening, in town and village, in club-room, mess-room, to the utmost borders, some mimic reflex or imaginative repetition to the business; always with the angry questionable assertion: It was right; It was wrong. Whereby come controversies, duels; imbitterment, vain jargon; the hastening forward, the augmenting and intensifying of whatever new explosions lie in store for us.

835. Meanwhile, at this cost or at that, the mutiny, as we say, is stilled. The French Army has neither burst-up in universal simultaneous delirium; nor been at once disbanded, put an end to, and made new again. It must die in the chronic manner, through years, by inches; with partial revolts, as of Brest Sailors or the like, which dare not spread; with men unhappy, insubordinate; officers unhappier, in Royalist mustachios, taking horse, singly or in bodies, across the Rhine;* sick dissatisfaction, sick disgust

836. Thus much was the brave Bouillé hitherto fated to do. Wherewith let him again fade into dimness; and, at Metz or the rural Cantonments, assiduously drilling, mysteriously diplomatizing, in scheme within scheme, hover as formerly a faint shadow, the hope of Royalty.
BOOK THIRD.

THE TUILERIES.

CHAPTER I.

837. How true, that there is nothing dead in this Universe; that what we call dead is only changed, its forces working in inverse order! “The leaf that lies rotting in moist winds,” says one, “has still force; else how could it rot?”

Our whole Universe is but an infinite Complex of Forces; thousand-fold, from Gravitation up to Thought and Will; man’s Freedom environed with Necessity of Nature: in all which nothing at any moment slumbers, but all is forever awake and busy.

The thing that lies isolated inactive thou shalt nowhere discover; seek everywhere, from the granite mountain, slow-moldering since Creation, to the passing cloud-vapor, to the living man; to the action, to the spoken word of man. The word that is spoken, as we know, flies irrevocable; not less, but more, the action that is done. “The gods themselves,” sings Pindar, “cannot annihilate the action that is done.”

No: this once done, is done always; cast forth into endless Time; and, long conspicuous or soon hidden, must verily work and grow forever there, an indestructible new element in the Infinite of Things. Or, indeed, what is this Infinite of Things itself which men name Universe, but an Action, a sum-total of Actions and Activities? The living ready-made sum-total of these three,—which Calculation cannot add, cannot bring on its tablets; yet the sum, we say, is written visible: All that has been done, All that is doing, All that will be done! Understand it well, the Thing thou beholdest, that Thing is an Action, the product and expression of exerted Force: the All of Things is an infinite conjunction of the verb To do. Shoreless Fountain-Ocean of Force, of power to do; wherein Force rolls and circles, billowing, many-streamed, harmonious; wide as Immensity, deep as Eternity; beautiful and terrible, not to be comprehended: this is what man names Existence and Universe; this thousand-tinted Flame image at once veil and revelation, reflex such as he, in his poor brain and heart, can paint, of One Unnamable, dwelling in inaccessible light! From beyond the Star-galaxies, from before the Beginning of Days, it billows and rolls,—round thee, may thyself art of it, in this point of Space where thou now standest, in this moment which thy clock measures.

838. Or, apart from all Transcendentalism, is it not a plain truth of sense, which the duller mind can even consider as a truism, that human things wholly are in continual movement, and action and reaction, working continually forward, phasis after phasis, by unalterable laws, toward prescribed issues? How often must we say, and yet not rightly lay to
THE TUILERIES.

Heart, the seed that is sown, it will spring! Given the season's blossoming, then there is also given the autumnal withering; so is it ordered not with seed-fields only, but with transactions, arrangements, philosophies, societies, French Revolutions, whatsoever man works with in this lower world. The Beginning holds in it the End, and all that leads thereto; as the acorn does the oak and its fortunes. Solemn enough, did we think of it,—which unhappily, and also happily, we do not much! Thou there canst begin: the Beginning is for thee, and there: but where, and of what sort, and for whom will the End be? All grows, and seeks and endures its destinies; consider likewise how much grows, as the trees do, whether we think of it or not. So that when your Epimenides, your somnolent Peter Klaus, since named Rip van Winkle, awakens again, he finds it a changed world. In that seven-years' sleep of his, so much has changed! All that is without us will change while we think not of it; much even that is within us. The truth that was yesterday a restless Problem, has to-day grown a Belief: uttering today: on the morrow, contradiction has exasperated it into mad Fanaticism; obstruction has dulled it into sick Inertness; it is sinking toward silence, of satisfaction or resignation. To-day is not Yesterday, for man or for thing. Yesterday there was the oath of Love; to-day has come the curse of Hate. Not willingly: ah no; but it could not help coming. The golden radiance of youth, would it willingly have tarnished itself into the dimness of old age?—Fearful; how we stand enveloped, deep-sunk, in that Mystery of Time; and are Sons of Time: fashioned and woven out of Time; and on us and on all that we have, or see, or do, is written: Rest not, Continue not, forward to thy doom!

389. But in seasons of Revolution, which indeed distinguish themselves from common seasons by their velocity mainly, your miraculous Seven-sleeper might, with miracle enough, awake sooner: not by the century, or seven years, need he sleep; often not by the seven months. Fancy, for example, some new Peter Klaus, sated with the jubilee of that Federation day, had lain down, say directly after the Blessing of Talleyrand; and, reckoning it all safe now, had fallen composedly asleep under the timbers of the Fatherland's Altar; to sleep there, not twenty-one years, but as it were year and day. The cannonading of Nanci, so far off, does not disturb him; nor does the black mort cloth, close at hand, nor the requiems chanted, and minute-guns, incense-pans and conceits right over his head: none of these; but Peter sleeps through them all. Through one circling year, as we say: from July the 14th of 1790, till July the 17th of 1791: but on that latter day, no Klaus, nor most leaden Epimenides, only the Dead could continue sleeping; and so our miraculous Peter Klaus awakens. With what eyes, O Peter! Earth and sky have still their joyous July look, and the Champ-de-Mars is multitudinous with men: but the jubilee-huzzahing has become Bedlam-shrieking, of terror and revenge; not blessing of Talleyrand, or any blessing, but cursing, imprecation, and shrill wail; our cannon-salvoes are turned to sharp shot:
for swinging of incense-pans, and Eighty-three Departmental Banners, we have waving of the one sanguineous Drapeau Rouge.—Thou foolish Klaus! The one lay in the other, the one was the other minus Time; even as Hannibal's rock-rending vinegar lay in the sweet new wine. That sweet Federation was of last year; this sour Divulsion is the self-same substance, only older by the appointed days.

840. No miraculous Klaus or Epimenides sleeps in these times; and yet, may not many a man, if of opacity and levity, act the same miracle in a natural way; we mean, with his eyes open? Eyes has he, but he sees not, except what is under his nose. With a sparkling briskness of glance, as if he not only saw but saw through, such a one goes whisking, assiduous, in his circle of officialities; not dreaming but that it is the whole world; as indeed, where your vision terminates, does not inanity begin there, and the world's end clearly disclose itself—to you? Whereby our brisk-sparkling assiduous official person (call him, for instance, Lafayette), suddenly startled, after year and day, by huge grape-shot tumult, stares not less astonished at it than Peter Klaus would have done. Such natural-miracle can Lafayette perform; and indeed not he only but most other officials, non-officials, and generally the whole French People can perform it; and do bounce up, ever and anon, like amazed Seven-sleepers awakening, awakening amazed at the noise they themselves made. So strangely is Freedom, as we say, environed in Necessity; such a singular Somnambulism, of Conscious and Unconscious, of Voluntary and Invol-fight.* Can he bear to have a Distaff, a Quenouille sent to him: say in copper-plate shade, by post; or fixed up in wooden reality over his gate-lintel: as if he were no Hercules, but an Omphale? Such scutcheons they forward to him diligently from beyond the Rhine; till he too bestir himself and march, and in sour humor another Lord of Land is gone, not taking the Land with him. Nay, what of Captains and emigrating Seigneurs? There is not an angry word on any of those 25,000,000 French tongues, and indeed not an angry thought in their hearts, but is some fraction of the great Battle. Add many successions of angry words together, you have the manual brawl; add brawls together, with the festering sorrows they leave, and they rise to riots and revolts. One reverent thing after another, ceases to meet reverence; in visible material combustion, château after château mounts up; in spiritual invisible combustion, one authority after another. With noise and glare, or noiselessly and un noted, a whole Old System of things is vanishing piecemeal: the morrow thou shalt look, and it is not.

CHAPTER II.

THE WAKEFUL.

843. Sleep who will, cradled in hope and short vision, like Lafayette, who "always in the danger

* Dampmartin, passim.

...done sees the last danger that will threaten him,"—Time is not sleeping, nor Time's seed-field.

844. That sacred Herald's-College of a new Dynasty; we mean the Sixty and odd Bill-stickers with their leaden badges, are not sleeping. Daily they, with paste-pot and cross-staff, new-clothe the walls of Paris in colors of the rainbow: authoritative-heraldic, as we say, or indeed almost magical-thaumaturgic; for no Placard-Journal that they paste but will convince some soul or souls of men. The Hawkers bawl; and the Ballad-singers: great Journalism blows and blusters, through all its throats, forth from Paris toward all corners of France, like an Ἂθήλος's Cave; keeping all manner of fires.

845. Throats of Journals there are, as men count, to the number of some Hundred and thirty-three. Of various caliber: from your Cheniers, Gorsases, Camilles, down to your Marat, down now to your incipient Hébert of the Pére Duchesne; these blow, with fierce weight of argument or quick light banter, for the Rights of Man: Durosoys, Royous, Pel tiers, Sulleaus, equally with mixed tactics (inclusive, singular to say, of much profane Parody), are blowing for Altar and Throne. As for Marat the People's Friend, his voice is as that of the bull-frog, or bittern by the solitary pools; he, unseen of men, croaks harsh thunder, and that alone continually,—of indignation, suspicion, ineradicable sorrow. The People are sinking toward ruin, near starvation itself: "My dear friends," cries he, "your indigences is not the fruit of vices nor of idleness; you have a right to life, as good as Louis XVI., or the happiest of the century. What man can say he has a right to dine, when you have no bread? The People sinking on the one hand; on the other hand, nothing but wretched Sieur Motiers, treasonous Riquetti Mira- beaus: traitors, or else shadows and simulacra of Quacks to be seen in high places, look where you will! Men that go mincing, grimacing, with plausible speech and brushed raiment; hollow within: Quacks political, Quacks scientific, académica: all with a fellow-feeling for each other, and kind of Quack public-spirit! Not great Lavoisier himself, or any of the Forty can escape this rough tongue; which wants neither fanatic sincerity, nor, strangest of all, a certain rough sarcastic sense. And then the "3,000 gaming-houses" that are in Paris; cesspools for the scoundrelism of the world; sinks of iniquity and debauchery,—whereas without good morals Liberty is impossible! There, in these Dens of Satan, which one knows, and perseveringly denounced, do Sieur Motier's mouchards consort and colleague; battening vampire-like on a People next door to starvation. "O Peuple!" cries he oftentimes, with heart-rending accent. Treason, delusion, vampirism, scoundrelism, from Dan to Beersheba! The soul of Marat is sick with the sight: but what remedy? To erect "800 gibbets," in convenient rows, and proceed to hoisting; "Riquetti on the first of them!" Such is the brief recipe of Marat, Friend of the People.

846. So blow and bluster the 133; nor, as would seem, are these sufficient; for there are benighted nooks in France, to which Newspapers do not reach; and everywhere is "such an appetite for news as was never seen in any country." Let an expeditious Dampmartin, on furlough, set out to return home from Paris, he cannot get along for "peasants stopping him on the highway; overwhelming him with questions." the Maitre de Poste will not send out the horses till you have well-nigh quarelled with him, but asks always, What news? At Autun, in spite of the dark night and "rigorous frost," for it is now January, 1791, nothing will serve but you must gather your wayworn limbs and thoughts, and "speak to the multitudes from a window opening into the market-place." It is the shortest method: This, good Christian people, is verily what an august Assembly seemed to me to be doing; this and no other is the news:

Now my weary lips I close: Leave me, leave me to repose!

The good Dampmartin!—But, on the whole, are not Nations astonishingly true to their National character; which indeed runs in the blood? Nineteen hundred years ago, Julius Caesar, with his quick, sure eye, took note how the Gauls waylaid men. "It is a habit of theirs," says he, "to stop travelers, were it even by constraint, and inquire whatsoever each of them."
them may have heard or known about any sort of matter: in their towns, the common people beset the passing trader, demanding to hear from what regions he came, what things he got acquainted with there. Excited by which rumors and hearsays, they will decide about the weightiest matters, and necessarily repent next moment that they did it, on such guidance of uncertain reports, and many a traveler answering with mere fictions to please them, and get off."* Nineteen hundred years; and good Dampmartin, wayworn, in winter frost, probably with scant light of stars and fish-oil, still perorates from the Inn-window! This people is no longer called Gaulish; and it has wholly become braccatus, has got breeches, and suffered change enough: certain fierce German Franken came storming over; and, so to speak, vaulted on the back of it; and always after, in their grim tenacious way, have ridden it bridled; for German is, by his very name, Guerre-man, or man that wares and gars. And so the People, as we say, is now called French or Frankish: nevertheless, does not the old Gaulish and Gaelic Celthood, with its vehemence, effervescent promptitude, and what good and ill it had, still vindicate itself little adulterated?—847. For the rest, that in such prurient confusion, Clubbism thrives and spreads, need not be said. Already the Mother of Patriotism, sitting in the Jacobins, shines supreme over all; and has paled the poor lantern light of that Monarchic Club near to final extinction. She, we say, shines supreme, girt with sunlight, not yet with infernal lightning; reverenced, not without fear, by Municipal Authorities; counting her Barnaves, Lameths, Pétions, of a National Assembly; most gladly of all, her Robespierre. Cordeliers, again, your Hébert, Vincent, Bibliopolist Monora, grow audibly that a tyrannous Mayor and Sieur Mother harrow them with the sharp tribula of Law, intent apparently to suppress them by tribulation. How the Jacobin Mother Society, as hinted formerly, sheds forth Cordeliers on this hand, and then Feuillans on that; the Cordeliers "an elixir or double distillation of Jacobin Patriotism," the other a widespread weak dilution thereof: how she will reabsorb the former into her mother bosom, and stormfully dissipate the latter into Noneutity: how she breeds and brings forth Three Hundred Daughter Societies; her endeavors and continual travail: how, under an old figure, Jacobinism shoots forth organic filaments to the utmost corners of confused dissolved France; organizing it anew.—this properly is the grand fact of the Time.

848. To passionate Constitutionalism, still more to Royalism, which see all their own Clubs fall and die, Clubbism will naturally grow to seem the root of all evil. Nevertheless Clubbism is not death, but rather new organization, and life out of death: destructive, indeed, of the remnants of the Old; but to the New important, indispensable. That man can co-operate and hold communion with man, herein lies his miraculous strength. In hut or hamlet, Patriotism mourns not now like voice in the desert; it can walk to the nearest Town; and there, in the Daughter Society, make its ejaculation into an articulate oration, into an action, guided forward by the Mother of Patriotism herself. All Clubs of Constitutionalists, and such-like, fall, one after another, as shallow fountains: Jacobinism alone has gone down to the deep subterranean lake of waters; and may, unless filled in, flow there, copious, continual, like an Artesian well. Till the Great Deep have drained itself up; and all be flooded and submerged, and Noah's Deluge out-deluged!

849. On the other hand, Claude Fauchet, preparing mankind for a Golden Age now apparently just at hand, has opened his Cercle Social, with clerks, corresponding boards, and so forth; in the precincts of the Palais Royal. It is Te-Deum Fauchet; the same who preached on Franklin's Death, in that huge Medicean rotunda of the Halle-aux-bleus. He here, this winter, by Printing-press and melodious Colloquy, spreads bruit of himself to the utmost City-barriers. "Ten thousand persons of respectability" attend there; and listen to this "Procureur-Général de la Vérité (Attorney-General of Truth)," so has he dubbed himself; to his sage Condorcet, or other eloquent coadjutor. Eloquent Attorney-General! He blows out from him, better or worse, what crude or ripe thing he holds: not without result to himself; for it leads to a Bishopric, though only a Constitutional one. Fauchet approves himself a glib-tongued, strong-lunged, whole-hearted human individual: much flowing matter there is, and really of the better sort, about Right, Nature, Benevolence, Progress; which flowing matter, whether "it is pan-theistic," or is pot-theistic, only the greener mind, in these days, need examine. Busy Brissot was long ago of purpose to establish precisely some such regenerative Social Circle; may he not have tried it in "Newman-street Oxford-street," of the Fog Babylon; and failed,—as some say, surreptitiously pocketing the cash. Fauchet, not Brissot, was fated to be the happy man; whereat, however, generous Brissot will with sincere heart sing a timber-toned Nunc Domine.* But "10,000 persons of respectability:;) what a bulk have many things in proportion to their magnitude! This Cercle Social, for which Brissot chants in sincere timber-tones such Nunc Domine, what is it? Unfortunately wind and shadow. The main reality one finds in it now, is perhaps this: that "an Attorney-General of Truth" did once take shape of a body, as Son of Adam, on our Earth, though but for months or moments; and 10,000 persons of respectability attended, ere yet Chaos and Nox had reabsorbed him.

850. Hundred and thirty-three Paris Journals; regenerative Social Circle; oratory, in Mother and Daughter Societies, from the balconies of Iams, by chimney-nook, at dinner-table,—polemical, ending many times in duel! And ever, like a constant growling accompaniment of bass Discord: scarcity of work, scarcity of food. The winter is hard and cold; ragged Baker's-queues, like a black tattered flag-of-distress, wave out ever and anon. It is the third of our Hunger-years, this new year of a glorious Revolution. The rich man when invited to dine

...iner, in such distress-seasons, feels bound in politeness to carry his own bread in his pocket, how the poor dine? And your glorious Revolution has done it, cries one. And our glorious Revolution is subtly by black traitors worthy of the Lamp-iron, perverted to do it, cries another. Who will paint the huge whirlpool within France, all shivered into wild incoherence, whirls? The jarring that went on under every French roof, in every French heart; the diseased things that were spoken, done, the sumtotal whereof is the French Revolution, tongue of man cannot tell. Nor the laws of action that work unseen in the depths of that huge blind Incoherence! With amazement, not with measurement, men look on the Immeasurable; not knowing its laws; seeing, with all different degrees of knowledge, what new phases, and results of event, its laws bring forth. France is as a monstrous Galvanic Mass, wherein all sorts of far stranger than chemical galvanic or electric forces and substances are at work; electrifying one another, positive and negative; filling with electricity your Leyden-jars,—25,000,000 in number! As the jars get full, there will, from time to time, be, on slight hint, an explosion.

CHAPTER III.

SWORD IN HAND.

851. On such wonderful basis, however, has Law, Royalty, Authority, and whatever yet exists of visible Order, to maintain itself, while it can. Here, as in that Commixture of the Four Elements did the Anarch Old, has an august Assembly spread its pavilion; curtained by the dark infinite of discords; founded on the wavering bottomless of the Abyss; and keeps continual hubbub. Time is around it, and Eternity, and the Inane; and it does what it can, what is given it to do.

852. Glancing reluctantly in, once more, we discern little that is edifying: a Constitutional Theory of Defective Verbs struggling forward, with perseverance, amid endless interruptions: Mirabeau, from his tribune, with the weight of his name and genius, awing-down much Jacobin violence; which in return vents itself the louder over in its Jacobins Hall, and even reads him sharp lectures there.* This man's path is mysterious, questionable; difficult, and he walks without companion in it. Pure Patriotism does not now count him among her chosen; pure Royalism abhors him: yet his weight with the world is overwhelming. Let him travel on, companionless, unwavering, whither he is bound,—while it is yet day with him, and the night has not come.

853. But the chosen band of pure Patriot brothers is small; counting only some thirty, seated on the extreme tip of the Left, separate from the world. A virtuous Pétion; an incorruptible Robespierre, most consistent, incorruptible of thin acid men; Triumvirs Barnave, Duport, Lameth, great in speech, thought, action, each according to his kind; a lean old Gaspil de Prefeln: on these and what we think has pure Patriotism to depend.

854 There too, conspicuous among the Thirty, if seldom audible, Philippe d'Orléans may be seen sitting, in dim fuliginous bewilderment; leaving, one might say, arrived at Chaos! Gleams there are, at once of a Lieutenant and Regency: debates in the Assembly itself, of succession to the Throne "in case the present Branch should fail," and Philippe, they say, walked anxiously, in silence, through the corridors, till such high argument were done: but it came all to nothing; Mirabeau, glaring into the man, and through him, had to ejaculate in strong untranslatable language: "Ce j—f—ne vaut pas la peine qu'on se donne pour lui." It came all to nothing; and in the meanwhile Philippe's money, they say, is gone! Could he refuse a little cash to the gifted Patriot, in want only of that; he himself in want of— all that? Not a pamphlet can be printed without cash; or indeed written without food purchasable by cash. Without cash your hopefulst Projector cannot stir from the spot; individual patriotic or other Projects require cash: how much more do wide-spread Intrigues, which live and exist by cash; lying well-spread, with dragon appetite for cash; fit to swallow Princedoms? And so Prince Philippe, amid his Sillerys, Lacloses and confused Sons of Night, has rolled along: the center of the strangest cloudy coil; out of which has visibly come, as we often say, Epic Preternatural Machinery of Suspicion; and within which there has dwelt and worked,—what specialities of treason stratagem, aimed or aimless endeavor toward mischief, no party living (if it be not the presiding Genius of it, Prince of the power of the Air), has now any chance to know. Camille's conjecture is the likeliest; that poor Philippe did mount up, a little way, in treasonable speculation, as he mounted formerly in one of the earliest Balloons; but, frightened at the new position he was getting into, had soon turned the cock again, and came down. More fool than he rose! To create Preternatural Suspicion, this was his function in the Revolutionary Epos. But now if he have lost his cornucopia of ready-money, what else had he to lose? In thick darkness, inward and outward, he must waver and flounder on, in that piteous death-element, the hapless man. Once, or even twice, we shall still behold him emerged; struggling out of the thick death-element: in vain. For one moment, it is the last moment, he starts aloft, or is flung aloft, even into clearness and a kind of memorability,—to sink then for evermore!

855. The Coté Droit persists no less, nay with more animation than ever, though hope has now well-nigh fled. Tough Abbé Maury, when the obscure country Royalist grasps his hand with transport of thanks, answers, rolling his indomitable brazen head: "Félas, Monsieur, all that I do here is as good as simply nothing." Gallant Faussigny, visible this one time in history, advance frantic into the middle of the Hall, exclaiming: "There is but one way of dealing with it, and that is to fall sword in hand on those gentry there (sabre à la main sur ces gaillards là)."

frantically indicating one chosen Thirty on the extreme tip of the Left! Whereupon is clangor and clamor, debate, repentance—evaporation. Things ripen toward downright incompatibility, and what is called "scission:" that fierce theoretic onslaught of Faussigny's was in August, 1790; next August will not have come, till a famed Two Hundred and Ninety-two, the chosen of Royalism, make solemn final "scission" from an Assembly given up to fiction; and depart, shaking the dust off their feet.

856. Connected with this matter of sword in hand, there is yet another thing to be noted. Of duels we have sometime spoken: how, in all parts of France, innumerable duels were fought; and argumentative men and messmates, flinging down the wine-cup and weapons of reason and repartee, met in the measured field; to part bleeding; or perhaps not to part, but to fall mutually skewered through with iron, their wrath and life ending,—and dies as fools die. Long has this lasted, and still lasts. But now it would seem as if in an august Assembly itself, traitorous Royalism in its despair, had taken a new course: that of cutting off Patriotism by systematic duel! Bully swordsmen, "Spadassins" of that party, go swaggering; or indeed they can be had for a trifle of money. "Twelve Spadassins" were seen, by the yellow eye of Journalism, "arriving recently out of Switzerland," also "a considerable number of Assassins (nombre considérable d'assassins), exercising in fencing-schools and at pistol-targets." Any Patriot Deputy o' mark can be called out; let him escape one time, or ten times, a time there necessarily is when he must fall, and France mourn. How many cartels has Mirabeau had; especially while he was the People's champion! Cartels by the hundred: which he, since the Constitution must be made first, and his time is precious, answers now always with a kind of stereotype formula: "Monsieur, you are put upon my List; but I warn you that it is long, and I grant no preferences."

857. Then, in Autumn, had we not the Duel of Cazales and Barnave; the two chief masters of tonguetshot, meeting now to exchange pistol-shot? For Cazales, chief of the Royalists, whom we call "Blacks or Noirs," said, in a moment of passion, "the Patriots were sheer Brigands," nay in so speaking, he darted, or seemed to dart, a fire-glance especially at Barnave; who therupon could not but reply by fire-glances,—by adjournment to the Bois-du-Boulogne. Barnave's second shot took effect: on Cazales's "front nook" of a triangular Felt, such as mortals then wore, deadened the hall; and saved that fine brow from more than temporary injury. But how easily might the lot have fallen the other way, and Barnave's hat not been so good! Patriotism raises its loud denunciation of Duelling in general; petitions an august Assembly to stop such Feudal barbarism by law. Barbarism and solecism: for will it convince or convict any man to blow half an ounce of lead through the head of him? Surely not—Barnave was received at the Jacobins with embraces, yet with rebukes.

858. Mindful of which, and also that his reputation in America was that of headlong, foolhardiness rather, and want of brain, not of heart, Charles Lameth does, on the eleventh day of November, with little emotion, decline attending some hot young Gentlemen from Artois, come expressly to challenge him: may indeed he first coldly engages to attend; then coldly permits two Friends to attend instead of him, and shame the young Gentlemen out of it, which they successfully do. A cold procedure; satisfactory to the two Friends, to Lameth and the hot young Gentlemen; whereby, one might have fancied, the whole matter was cooled down.

389. Not so, however; Lameth, proceeding to his senatorial duties, in the decline of the day, is met in those Assembly corridors by nothing but Royalist brocarts; sniffs, huffs and open insults. Human patience has its limits: "Monsieur," said Lameth, breaking silence to one Lautrec, a man with hunchback, or natural deformity, but sharp of tongue, and a Black of the deepest tint, "Monsieur, if you were a man to be fought with!"—"I am one," cries the young Duke de Castries. Fast as fire-flash Lameth replies, "Tout à l'heure (On the instant, then)!"

And so, as the shades of dusk thicken in that Bois-de-Boulogne, we behold two men with lion-look, with alert attitude, side foremost, right foot advanced; flourishing and thrusting, stoccado and passado, in tierce and quart; intent to skewer one another. See with most skewering purpose, headlong Lameth, with his whole weight, makes a furious lunge; but deft Castries whisks aside: Lameth skewers only the air,—and slits deep and far, on Castries's sword's-point, his own extended left arm! whereupon, with bleeding, pallor, surgeon's-lint, and formalities, the Duel is considered satisfactorily done.

390. But will there be no end, then? Beloved Lameth lies deep-slit, not out of danger. Black traitorous Aristocrats kill the People's defenders, cut up not with arguments, but with rapier-slits. And the Twelve Spadassins out of Switzerland, and the considerable number of Assassins exercising at the pistol-target? So meditates, and ejaculates hurt Patriotism, with ever-deepening, ever-widening fervor, for the space of six-and-thirty hours.

391. The thirty-six hours past, on Saturday the 13th, one beholds a new spectacle: The Rue de Varennes, and neighboring Boulevard des Invalides, covered with a mixed flowing multitude: the Castries Hotel gone distracted, devil-ridden, belching from every window, "beds with clothes and curtains," plate of silver and gold with filigree, mirrors, pictures, images, commodes, chiffoniers and endless crockery and jingle: amid steady popular cheers, absolutely without theft: for there goes a cry, "He shall be hanged that steals a nail." It is a Plebiscitum, or informed iconoclastic Decree of the Common People in the course of being executed!—The Municipality sit tremulous; deliberating whether they will hang out the Drapeau Rouge and Martial Law; National Assembly, part in loud wail, part in hardly suppressed applause; Abbé Maury unable to decide whether the iconoclastic Plebs amount to 40,000 or to 200,000.

392. Deputations, swift messengers,—for it is at a distance over the River,—come and go. Lafayette and National Guards, though without Drapeau Rouge, got under way; apparently in no hot haste. Nay, arrived on the scene, Lafayette salutes with doffed hat, before ordering to fix bayonets. What avails it? The Plebeian "Court of Cessation" as Camille might punningly name it, has done its work; steps forth, with unbuttoned vest, with pockets turned inside out; sack, and just ravage, not plunder! With in-exhaustible patience, the Hero of two Worlds remonstrates; persuasively, with a kind of sweet constraint, though also with fixed bayonets, dissipates, hushes down: on the morrow it is once more all as usual.

863. Considering which things, however, Duke Castries may justly "write to the President," justly transport himself across the Marches; to raise a corps, or do what else is in him. Royalism totally abandons that Bobadilian method of contest, and the twelve Spadassins return to Switzerland—or even to Dreamland through the Horn-gate, whichever their true home is. Nay Editor Prudhomme is authorized to publish a curious thing: "We are authorized to publish," says he, dull-blustering Publisher, "that M. Boyer champion of good Patriots is at the head of Fifty Spadassinicides or Bully-killers. His address is: Passage du Bois-de-Boulogne, Faubourg St. Denis.* One of the strangest Institutes, this of Champion Boyer and the Bully-killers! Whose services, however, are not wanted; Royalism having abandoned the rapier method, as plainly impracticable.

* "Revolutions de Paris" (in "Histoire Parlementaire," viii. 466).

TO FLY OR NOT TO FLY.

CHAPTER IV.

864. The truth is, Royalism sees itself verging toward sad extremities; nearer and nearer daily. From over the Rhine it comes asserted that the King in his Tuileries is not free: this the poor King may contradict, with the official mouth, but in his heart feels often to be undeniable. Civil Constitution of the Clergy; Decree of ejectment against Dissidents from it: not even to this latter, though almost his conscience rebels, can he say Nay; but, after two months' hesitation, signs this also. It was "on January 21st," of this 1791, that he signed it: to the sorrow of his poor heart yet, on another Twenty-first of January! Whereby come Dissident ejected Priests; unconquerable Martyrs according to some, incurable chicaneering Traitors according to others. And so there has arrived what we once foreshadowed: with Religion, or with the Cant and Echo of Religion, all France is rent asunder in a new rupture of continuity; complicating, imbittering all the older,—to be cured only by stern surgery, in La Vendée!

865. Unhappy Royalty, unhappy Majesty, Hereditary Representative (Representant Héréditaire), or howsoever they may be named, to whom little is given! Blue National Guards encircle that Tuileries; a Lafayette, thin, constitutional Pedant; clear, thin, inflexible, as water turned to thin ice; whom no Queen's heart can love. National Assembly, its pavilion spread where we know, sits near by, keeping continual hubbub. From without, nothing but Nanci Revolts, sack of Castries Hotels, riots and seditions; riots North and South, at Aix, at Douai, at Béfourt, Usez, Nîmes, and that inebriate Avignon of the Pope's; a continual crackling and sputtering of riots from the whole face of France;—testifying how electric it grows. Add only the hard winter, the famished operatives; that continual running-bass of Scarcity, ground-tone and basis of all other Discords! 866. The plan of Royalty, so far as it can be said to have any fixed plan, is still, as ever, that of flying toward the frontiers. In very truth, the only plan of the smallest promise for it! Fly to Bouillé; bristle yourself round with cannon, served by your "40,000 unindebauched Germans;" summon the National Assembly to follow you, summon what of it is Royalist, Constitutional, gainable by money; dissolve the rest, by grape-shot if need be. Let Jacobinism and Revolt, with one wild wail, fly into Infinite Space; driven by grape-shot. Thunder over France with the cannon's mouth; commanding, not entreat- ing, that this riot cease. And then to rule afterward with utmost possible Constitutionaluty; doing justice, loving mercy; being Shepherd of this indigent People, not Shearer merely, and Shepherd's similitude! All this, if ye dare. If ye dare not, then in Heaven's name, go to sleep: other handsome alternative seems none.

867. Nay, it were perhaps possible; with a man to do it. For if such inexpresable whirlpool of Babylonish confusions (which our Era is) cannot be stilled by man, but only by Time and men, a man may moderate its paroxysms, may balance and sway, and keep himself unswallowed on the top of it,—as several men and Kings in these days do. Much is possible for a man; men will obey a man that knows and comes, and name him reverently their Ken-King or King. Did not Charlemagne rule? Consider, too, whether he had smooth times of it; hanging "4,000 Saxons over the Weser-bridge," at one dread swoop! So likewise, who knows but, in this same distracted frantic France, the right man may verify exist? An olive-complexioned taciturn man; for the present, Lieutenant in the Artillery-service, who once sat studying Mathematics at Brienne! The same who walked in the morning to correct proof-sheets at Dole, and enjoyed a frugal breakfast with M. Joly? Such a one is gone, whither also famed General Paoli his friend is gone, in these very days, to see old scenes in native Corsica, and what Democratic good can be done there.

868. Royalty never executes the evasion plan, yet never abandons it; living in variable hope; undecisive, till fortune shall decide. In utmost secrecy, a brisk Correspondence goes on with Bouillé; there is also a plot, which emerges more than once, for carrying the King to Rouen; a plot after plot emerging and submerging, like ignes fatui in foul weather, which lead nowhere. "About ten o'clock at night," the Hereditary Representative, in parlour, with the Queen, Brother Monsieur, and Madame, sits playing "whisk," or whist. Usher Campan enters mysteriously, with a message he only half comprehends: How a certain Comte d'Inisdal waits anxious in the outer ante-chamber; National Colonel, Captain of the watch for this night, is gained over; post-horses ready all the way; party of Noblesse sitting armed, determined; will his Majesty, before midnight, consent to go? Profound silence; Campan waiting with upturned ear, "Did your Majesty hear what Campan said?" asks the Queen, "Yes, I heard," answers Majesty, and plays on. "Twas a pretty couplet, that of Campan's," hints Monsieur, who at times showed a pleasant wit: Majesty, still unresponsive, plays whisk. "After all, one must say something to Campan," remarks the Queen. "Tell M. d'Inisdal," said the King, and the Queen puts an emphasis on it, "That the King cannot consent to be forced away." "I see," said D'Inisdal, whisking round, peaking himself into flame of irritancy: "we have the risk; we are to have all the blame if it fail," and vanishes, he and his plot, as will-o'-wisps do. The Queen sattill far in the night, packing jewels: but it came to nothing; in that peaked flame of irritancy the will-o'-wisps had gone out.

869. Little hope there is in all this. Alas, with whom to fly? Our loyal Gardes-du-Corps, ever since the Insurrection of Women, are disbanded; gone to their homes; gone, many of them, across the Rhine toward Coblenz and Exiled Princes; brave Misanandre and brave Tardivet, these faithful Two, have received, in nocturnal interview with both Majesties, their viatenum of good lots, of heartfelt thanks from a Queen's lips, the unlucky his Majesty stood, back to fire, not speaking; and do now dine through the Provis, recounting hairs-breadth escapes, insurrection — horrors. Great horrors, to be swallowed yet of; but, on the whole, what a falling off from the old splendor of Versailles! Here in this poor Tui —res a National Brewer-Colonel, sonorous Santerre, speaks officially behind her Majesty's chair. Our eager dignitaries all fled over the Rhine: nothing to be gained at Court; but hopes, for which he himself must be risked! Obscure busy men frequent — wax back stairs; with hearsays, wind-projects, unfruitful fanfaronades. Young Royalists, at the Théau de Vaudeville, "sing couplets;" if that could do anything. Royalists enough, Captains on furlough, come-out Seigneurs, may likewise be met with, "in the Café de Valois, and at Mout the Restaurateur's." There they fan one another into high loyal glow; smoke, in such wine as can be procured, confusion -- Sansculotism; show purchased dirks, of an improviso structure, made to order; and, greatly daring, di... It is in these places, in these months that the exact Sansculotte first gets applied to indigent Patriotes; in the last age we had Gilbert Sansculotte, one indigent Poet, Destitute of Breeches: a mournful Destitution; which however, if Twenty millions were it, may become more effective than most Possessions!

* Campan, II. 104. @ Dampmartin, ii. 125.
† Mercier, "Nouveau Paris," ii. 304.
870. Meanwhile, amid this vague dim whirl of fanfaronades, wind-projects, poniards made to order, there does disclose itself one punctum saliens of life and feasibility; the finger of Mirabeau! Mirabeau and the Queen of France have met; have parted with mutual trust! It is strange; secret as the Mysteries; but it is indubitable. Mirabeau took horse, one evening; and rode westward, unattended, to see Friend Clavière in that country-house of his? Before getting to Clavière's, the much-amusing horseman struck aside to a back gate of the Garden of Saint-Cloud: some Duke d'Aremberg, or the like, was there to introduce him; the Queen was not far; on a "round knoll" (rond point), "the highest of the Garden of Saint-Cloud," he beheld the Queen's face; spake with her, alone, under the void canopy of Night. What an interview; fateful, secret for us, after all searching; like the colloquies of the gods! She called him "a Mirabeau;" elsewhere we read that she "was charmed with him," the wild submitted Titan; as indeed it is among the "onorable tokens of this high ill-fated heart that no mind of any endowment, no Mirabeau, nay no Baronne, no Dumouriez, ever came face to face with her yet. In spite of all prepossessions, she was forced to recognize it, to draw nigh to it, with trust. High superior heart; with the instinctive attraction toward all that had any height! "You know not the Queen," said Mirabeau once in confidence; "her force of mind is prodigious; she is a man for courage."*

* Campan, ii. c. 17.

† Dumont, p. 211.

And so, under the void Night, on the crown of that knoll, she has spoken with a Mirabeau: he has kissed loyally the queenly hand, and said with enthusiasm: "Madame, the Monarchy is saved!"—Possible? The Foreign Powers, mysteriously sounded, gave favorable guarded response;* Bouillé is at Metz, and could find 40,000 sure Germans. With a Mirabeau for head, and a Bouillé for hand, something verily is possible,—if Fate intervene not.

871. But figure under what thousand-fold wrappings, and cloaks of darkness, Royalty, meditating these things, must involve itself. There are men with "Tickets of Entrance," there are chivalrous consultations, mysterious plotings. Consider also whether, involve as it like, plotting Royalty can escape the glance of Patriotism; lynx-eyes, by the ten-thousand, fixed on it, which see in the dark! Patriotism knows much: knows the dirks made to order, and can specify the shops; knows Sieur Motier's legions of monarachs; the Tickets of Entrée, and men in black; and how plan of evasion succeeds plan,—or may be supposed to succeed it. They conceive the couplets chanted at the Théâtre de Vaudeville; or worse, the whispers, significant nods of traitors in mustachios. Conceive, on the other hand, the loud cry of alarm that came through the Hundred-and-Thirty Journals; the Dionysius-Ear of each of the Forty-eight Sections, wakeful night and day.

872. Patriotism is patient of much; not patient of...
The Café de Procope has sent, visibly along the streets, a Deputation of Patriots, "to expostulate with bad Editors," by trustful word of mouth: singular to see and hear. The bad Editors promise to amend, but do not. Deputations for change of Ministry were many; Mayor Bailly joining even with Cordelier Danton in such; and they have prevailed. With what profit? Of Quacks, willing or constrained to be Quacks, the race is everlasting: Ministers Duportail and Dutertre will have to manage much as Ministers Latour du Pin and Cieò did. So welters the confused world.

But now, beaten on forever by such inexorable contradictory influences and evidences, what is the indigent French Patriot, in these unhappy days, to believe and walk by? Uncertainty all: except that he is wretched, indigent; that a glorious Revolution, the wonder of the Universe, has hitherto brought neither Bread nor Peace; being marred by traitors, difficult to discover. Traitors that dwell in dark, invisible there;—or seen for moments, in pallid dubious twilight, stealthily vanishing thither! Preternatural Suspicion once more rules the minds of men.

"Nobody here," writes Carra, of the Annales Patriotiques, so early as the first of February, "can entertain a doubt of the constant obstinate project these people have on foot to get the King away; or of the perpetual succession of manœuvres they employ for that." Nobody: the watchful Mother of Patriotism deputed two Members to her Daughter at Versailles, to examine how the matter looked there.

Well, and there? Patriotic Carra continues: "The Report of these two deputies we all heard with our own ears last Saturday. They went with others of Versailles, to inspect the King's Stables, also the stables of the whilom Gardes-du-Corps: they found there from seven to eight hundred horses standing always saddled and bridled, ready for the road at a moment's notice. The same deputies, moreover, saw with their own two eyes several Royal Carriages, which men were even then busy loading with large well-stuffed luggage-bags," leather cases, as we call them, "vaches de cuir; the Royal Arms on the panels almost entirely effaced." Momentous enough! Also "on the same day the whole Maréchaussée, or Cavalry Police, did assemble with arms, horses and baggage,"—and disperse again. They want the King over the marches, that so Emperor Leopold and the German Princes, whose troops are ready, may have a pretext for beginning: "this," adds Carra, "is the word of the riddle: this is the reason why our fugitive Aristocrats are now making levies of men on the frontiers; expecting that, one of these mornings, the Executive Chief Magistrate will be brought over to them, and the civil war commence."
gality, is actually barking quite this time; at some thing, not at nothing. Bouillé's Secret Correspond ence, since made public, testifies as much.

376. Nay, it is undeniable, visible to all, that Mesdames the King's Aunts are taking steps for departure: asking passports of the Ministry, safe-conducts of the Municipality; which Marat warns all men to beware of. They will carry gold with them, "these old Béguines; may they will carry the little Dauphin, "having nursed a changeling, for some time to leave in his stead!" Besides, they are as some light substance flung up, to show how the wind sits; a kind of proof-kite you fly off to ascertain whether the grand paper-kite, Evasion of the King, may mount!

377. In these alarming circumstances, Patriotism is not wanting to itself. Municipality deputes to the King; Sections depute to the Municipality; a National Assembly will soon stir. Meanwhile, behold, on the 19th of February, 1791, Mesdames, quitting Bellevue and Versailles with all privacy, are off! Toward Rome, seemingly; or one knows not whither. They are not without King's passports, countersigned; and what is more to the purpose, a serviceable Escort. The Patriotic Mayor or Mayorlet of the Village of Moret tried to detain them; but brisk Louis de Narbonne, of the Escort dashed off at hand-gallop; returned soon with thirty dragoons, and victoriously cut them out. And so the poor ancient women go their way; to the terror of France and Paris, whose nervous excitability is become extreme. Who else would hinder poor Loque and Graille, now grown so old, and fallen into such unexpected circumstances, when gossip itself turning only on terrors and horrors is no longer pleasant to the mind, and you cannot get so much as an Orthodox confessor in peace,—from going what way soever the hope of any solacement might lead them?

378. They go, poor ancient dames,—whom the heart were hard that did not pity: they go; with palpitations, with unmelodious suppressed screeching; all France screeching and cackling, in loud unsuppressed terror, behind and on both hands of them; such mutual suspicion is among men. At Army le Duc, above half-way to the frontiers, a Patriotic Municipality and Populace again takes courage to stop them: Louis Narbonne must now go back to Paris, must consult the National Assembly. National Assembly answers, not without an effort, that Mesdames may go. Whereupon Paris rises worse than ever, screeching half-distracted. Tuileries and precincts are filled with women and men, while the National Assembly debates this question of questions; Lafayette is needed at night for dispersing them, and the streets are to be illuminated. Commandant Berthier, a Berthier before whom are great things unknown, lies for the present under blockade at Bellevue in Versailles. By no tactics could he get Mesdames' Luggage stirred from the Courtsthere; frantic Versailles women came screaming about him; his very troops cut the wagon-traces; he "retired to the interior," waiting better times.*

* Campan, ii. 132.
879. Nay, in these same hours, while Mesdames, hardly cut out from Moret by the saber's edge, are driving rapidly, to foreign parts, and not yet stopped at Arnay, their august Nephew, poor Monsieur, at Caen, can hardly be persuaded up again. Soreeching multitudes environ that Luxemburg of his; drawn thither by report of his departure; but at sight and sound of Monsieur, they become crowing multitudes; and escort Madame and him to the Tuileries with vivats. It is a state of nervous excitability such as few nations know.

CHAPTER V.

THE DAY OF PONIARDS.

880. Or again, what means this visible reparation of the Castle of Vincennes? Other Jails being all crowded with prisoners, new space is wanted here: that is the Municipal account. For in such changing of Judicatures, Parlements being abolished, and New Courts but just set up, prisoners have accumulated. Not to say that in these times of discord and club-law, offenses and committals are, at any rate, more numerous. Which Municipal account, does it not sufficiently explain the phenomenon? Surely, to repair the Castle of Vincennes was of all enterprises that an enlightened Municipality could undertake the most innocent.

* Montgallard, ii. 262; "Deux Amis," vi. o. 1.

881. Not so, however, does neighboring Saint-An­toine look on it: Saint-An­toine, to whom these peaked turrets and grim donjons, all too near her own dark dwelling are of themselves an offense. Was not Vincennes a kind of minor Bastille? Great Diderot and Philosophes have lain in durance here: great Mirabeau, in disastrous eclipse, for forty-two months. And now when the old Bastille has become a dancing-ground (had any one the mirth to dance), and its stones are getting built into the Pont Louis- Seize, does this minor, comparative insignificance of a Bastille flank itself with fresh-hewn mullions, spread out tyrannous wings; menacing Patriotism? New space for prisoners: and what prisoners? A D'Orléans, with the chief Patriots on the tip of the Left? It is said, there runs "a subterranean passage" all the way from the Tuileries hither. Who knows? Paris, mined with quarries and catacombs, does hang wondrous over the abyss; Paris was once to be blown up,—though the powder, when we went to look, had got withdrawn. A Tuileries, sent to Austria and Coblenz, should have no subterranean passage. Out of which might not Coblenz or Aus­tria issue, some morning; and with cannon of long range, "foudroyer," bethunder a patriotic Saint-An­toine into smolder and ruin!

882. So meditates the benighted soul of Saint-An­toine, as it sees the aproned workmen, in early spring, busy on these towers. An official-speaking Munici­pality, a Sieur Motier with his legions of mouchards, deserve no trust at all. Were Patriot Santerre, indeed, Commander! But the sonorous Brewer commands only our own Battalion: of such secrets he can explain nothing, knows, perhaps suspects much. And so the work goes on; and afflicted benighted Saint-Antoine hears rattle of hammers, sees stones suspended in air.*

883. Saint-Antoine prostrated the first great Bastille: will it falter over this comparative insignificance of a Bastille? Friends, what if we took pikes, firelocks, sledge-hammers; and help ourselves!—Speedier is no remedy; nor so certain. On the 28th day of February, Saint-Antoine turns out, as it has now often done; and, apparently with little superfluous tumult, moves eastward to that eye-sorrow of Vincennes. With grave voice of authority, no need of bullying and shouting, Saint-Antoine signifies to parties concerned there, that its purpose is, To have this suspicious Stronghold razed level with the general soil of the country. Remonstrances may be proffered, with zeal, but it avails not. The outer gate goes up, drawbridges tumble; iron window-stanchions, smitten out with sledge-hammers, become iron-crowbars: it rains a rain of furniture, stone-masses, slates: with chaotic clatter and rattle, Demolition clatters down. And now hasty expresses rush through the agitated streets, to warn Lafayette, and the Municipal and Departmental Authorities; Humor warns a National Assembly, a Royal Tuileries, and all men who care to hear it: That Saint-Antoine is up; that Vincennes, and probably the last remaining Institution of the Country, is coming down.*

884. Quick then! Let Lafayette roll his drums and fly eastward; for to all Constitutional Patriots this is again bad news. And you, ye Friends of Royalty, snatch your poniards of improved structure, made to order; your sword-canes, secret army, and tickets of entry; quick, by back-stairs passages, rally round the Son of Sixty Kings. An effervescence probably got up by D’Orléans and Company, for the overthrow of Throne and Altar: it is said her Majesty shall be put in prison, put out of the way; what then will his Majesty be? Clay for the Sans-culottic Potter! Or were it impossible to fly this day; a brave Noblesse suddenly all rallying? Peril threatens, hope invites: Dukes de Villequier, de Duras, Gentlemen of the Chamber give Tickets and admittance; a brave Noblesse is suddenly all rallying. Now were the time to “fall sword in hand on those gentry there,” could it be done with effect.

885. The Hero of two Worlds is on his white charger; blue Nationals, horse and foot, hurrying eastward; Santerre, with the Saint-Antoine Battalion, is already there,—apparently indisposed to act. Heavy-laden Hero of two Worlds what tasks are these? The jeerings, provocative gambollings of that Patriot Suburb, which is all out on the streets now, are hard to endure; unwashed Patriots jeering in sulky sport; one unwashed Patriot “seizing the General by the boot,” to unhorse him. Santerre, ordered to fire, makes answer obliquely. "These are the men that took the Bastille;" and not a trigger stirs. Neither dare the Vincennes Magistracy give warrant of arrestment, or the smallest countenance: wherefore the General "will take it on himself" to arrest. By promptitude, by cheerful adroitness, patience and brisk valor without limits, the riot may be again bloodlessly appeased.886. Meanwhile the rest of Paris, with more or less unconcern, may mind the rest of its business; for what is this but an effervescence, of which there are now so many? The National Assembly, in one of its stormiest moods, is debating a law against Emigration; Mirabeau declaring aloud, "I swear beforehand that I will not obey it." Mirabeau is often at the Tribune this day; with endless impediments from without; with the old unabated energy from within. What can murmurs and clamors, from Left or from Right, do to this man; like Teneriffe or Atlas unremoved? With clear thought; with strong bass voice, though at first low, uncertain, he claims audience, sways the storm of men; anon the sound of him waxes, softens: he rises into far-sounding melody of strength, triumphant, which subdues all hearts; his rude seamed face, desolate, fire-scathed, becomes fire-lit, and radiates: once again men feel, in these beggarly ages, what is the potency and omnipotency of man's word on the souls of men.

"I will triumph, or be torn in fragments," he was once heard to say. "Silence," he cries now, in strong word of command, in imperial consciousness of strength, "Silence, the thirty voices (Silence aux trente voix)!"—and Robeslapelle of Chevalier de Court? * Too like the handle of some cutting or stabbing instrument! He glides and goes; and still the dudgeon sticks from his left lapelle. “Hold, Monsieur!”—a Grenadier clutches him; clutches the protrusive dudgeon, whisks it out in the face of the world; by Heaven, a very dagger; hunting-knife or whatsoever you will call it: fit to drink the life of Patriotism! 889. So fared it with Chevalier de Court, early in the day; not without noise; not without commentaries. And now this continually increasing multitude at nightfall? Have they daggers too? Alas, with them too, after angry parleyings, there has begun a groping and a rummaging; all men in black, spite of their Tickets of Entry, are clutched by the collar, and groped. Scandalous to think of: for always, as the dirk, sword-cane, pistol, or were it but tailor’s bodkin, is found on him, and with loud scorn drawn forth from him, he the hapless man in black, is flung all too rapidly down stairs. Flung; and ignominiously descends, head foremost; accelerated by ignominious shovings from sentry after sentry; nay, as it is written, by spurnings à posteriori, not to be named. In this accelerated way emerges uncertain which end uppermost, man after man in black, through all issues, into the Tuileries Garden; emerges, alas, into the arms of an indignant multitude, now gathered and gathering there, in the hour of dusk, to see what is toward, and whether the Hereditary Representative is carried off or not. Hapless men in black; at last convicted of poniards * Weber, ii. 230.

made to order; convicted “Chevaliers of the Poniard!” Within is as the burning ship; without is as the deep sea. Within is no help; his Majesty, looking forth, one moment, from his interior sanctuaries, coldly bids all visitors “give up their weapons;” and shuts the door again. The weapons given up form a heap: the convicted Chevaliers of the Poniard keep descending pell-mell, with impetuous velocity; and at the bottom of all staircases the mixed multitude receives them, hustles, buffets, chases and disperses them.* 890. Such sight meets Lafayette, in the dusk of the evening, as he returns, successful with difficulty at Vincennes: Sansculotte Scylla hardly weathered, here is Aristocrat Charybdis gurgling under his lee! The pallent Hero of two Worlds almost loses temper. He accelerates, does not retard, the flying Chevaliers; delivers, indeed, this or the other hunted Loyalist of quality, but rates him in bitter words, such as the hour suggested; such as no saloon could pardon. Hero ill-bested; hanging, so to speak, in mid-air; hateful to Rich divinities above; hateful to Indigent mortals below! Duke de Villequier, Gentleman of the Chamber, gets such contumelious rating, in presence of all people there, that he may see good first to expiate himself in the Newspapers; then, that not prospering, to retire over the frontiers, and begin plotting at Brussels.† His Apartment will stand vacant; usefuller, as we may find, than when it stood occupied.

891. So fly the Chevaliers of the Poniard; hunted of Patriotic men, shamefully in the thickening dusk. A dim miserable business; born of darkness; dying away there in the thickening dusk and dimness. In the midst of which, however, let the reader discern clearly one figure running for its life: Crispin-Catiline d'Espréménil,—for the last time, or the last but one. It is not yet three years since these same Centre Grenadiers, Gardes Françaises then, marched him toward the Calypso Isles, in the gray of the May morning; and he and they have got thus far. Buffeted, beaten down, delivered by popular Pétion, he might well answer bitterly: "And I too, Monsieur, have been carried on the People's shoulders." A fact which popular Pétion, if he like, can meditate.

892. But happily, one way and another, the speedy night covers up this ignominious Day of Poniards; and the Chevaliers escape, though maltreated, with torn coat-skirts and heavy hearts, to their respective dwelling-houses. Riot twofold is quelled; and little blood shed, if it be not insignificant blood from the nose; Vincennes stands undemolished, reparable; and the Hereditary Representative has not been stolen, nor the Queen smuggled into Prison. A day long remembered: commented on with loud ha-has and deep grumblings; with bitter scornfulness of triumph, bitter rancor of defeat. Royalism, as usual, imputes it to D'Orléans and the Anarchists intent on insulting Majesty: Patriotism, as usual, to Royalists, and even Constitutionalists, intent on stealing Majesty to Metz: we, also, as usual, to Preternatural Suspicion, and Phœbus Apollo having made himself like the Night.

893. Thus, however, has the reader seen, in an unexpected arena, on this last day of February, 1791, the Three long-contending elements of French Society dashed forth into singular comico-tragical collision; acting and reacting openly to the eye. Constitutionalism, at once quelling Sansculottic riot at Vincennes, and Royalist treachery in the Tuileries, is great, this day, and prevails. As for poor Royalism, tossed to and fro in that manner, its daggers all left in a heap, what can one think of it? Every dog, the Adage says, has its day: has it; has had it; or will have it. For the present, the day is Lafayette's and the Constitution's. Nevertheless Hunger and Jacobinism, fast growing fanatical, still work; their day, were they once fanatical, will come. Hitherto, in all tempests, Lafayette, like some divine Sea-ruler, raises his serene-head: the upper Æolus blasts fly back to their caves, like foolish unbidden winds: the under sea-billows they had vexed into froth allay themselves. But if, as we often write, the submarine Titanic Fire-powers came into play, the Ocean-bed from beneath being burst? If they hurled Poseidon Lafayette and his Constitution out of Space; and, in the Titanic mélée, sea were mixed with sky?

CHAPTER VI.

THE TUILERIES.

894. The spirit of France waxes ever more acrid, fever-sick: toward the final outbreak of dissolution and delirium. Suspicion rules all minds: contending parties cannot now commingle; stand separated sheer asunder, eyeing one another, in most anguish mood, of cold terror, or hot rage. Counter-Revolution, Days of Poniards, Castrics Duels; Flight of Mesdames, of Monsieur and Royalty! Journalism shrills ever louder its cry of alarm. The sleepless Dionysius-Ear of the Forty-eight Sections, how feverishly quick has it grown; convulsing with strange pangs the whole sick Body, as in such sleeplessness and sickness the ear will do!

895. Since Royallists get Poniards made to order, and a Sieur Motier is no better than he should be,
shall not Patriotism too, even of the indigent sort, have Pikes, second-hand Firelocks, in readiness for the worst? The anvils ring, during this March month, with hammering of Pikes. A Constitutional Municipality promulgated its Placard, that no citizen except the "active" or cash-citizen was entitled to have arms; but there rose, instantly responsive, such a tempest of astonishment from Club and Section, that the Constitutional Placard, almost next morning, had to cover itself up, and die away into inanity, in a second improved edition. So the hammering continues; as all that it betokens does.896. Mark, again, how the extreme tip of the Left is mounting in favor, if not in its own National Hall, yet with the Nation, especially with Paris.
Far in such universal panic of doubt, the opinion that is sure of itself, as the meagerest opinion may the soonest be, is the one to which all men will

* Ordonnance du 17 Mars 1791 ("Histoire Parlementaire," IX. 807).
the confused darkness. Thirty Departments ready to sign loyal Addresses, of prescribed tenor; King carried out of Paris, but only to Compiègne and Rouen, hardly to Metz, since once for all, no Emigrant rabble shall take the lead in it; National Assembly consenting, by dint of loyal Addresses, by management, by force of Bouillé, to hear reason, and follow thither! Was it so, on these terms, that Jacobinism and Mirabeau were then to grapple, in their Hercules-and-Typhon duel? Death inevitable for the one or the other? The duel itself is determined on, and sure: but on what terms; much more with what issue, we in vain guess. It is vague darkness all: unknown what is to be; unknown even what has already been. The giant Mirabeau walks in darkness, as we said; companionless, on wild ways: what his thoughts during these months were no record of Biographer, nor vague Fils Adoptif, will now ever disclose.

889. To us, endeavoring to cast his horoscope, it of course remains doubly vague. There is one Herculean man; in internecine duel with him, there is Monster after Monster. Emigrant Noblesse return, sword on thigh, vaunting of their Loyalty never sullied; descending from the air, like Harpy-swarms with ferocity, with obscene greed. Earthward there is the Typhon of Anarchy, Political, Religious: sprawling hundred-headed, say with Twenty-five million heads; wide as the area of France; fierce as Frenzy, strong in very Hunger. With these shall the Serpent-queller do battle continually, and expect no rest.

890. As for the King, he as usual will go wavering chameleon-like; changing color and purpose with the color of his environment—good for no Kingly use. On one royal person, on the Queen only, can Mirabeau perhaps place dependence. It is possible, the greatness of this man, not unskilled too in blandishments, courtiership, and graceful adroitness, might, with most legitimate sorcery, fascinate the volatile Queen, and fix her to him. She has courage for all noble daring; an eye and a heart; the soul of Theresa's daughter. "Faut-il donc, Isit fated then," she passionately writes to her Brother, "that I with the blood I am come of, with the sentiments I have, must live and die among such mortals?" Alas, poor Princess, Yes. "She is the only man," as Mirabeau observes, "whom his Majesty has about him." Of one other man Mirabeau is still surer: of himself. There lie his resources; sufficient or insufficient.

891. Dim and great to the eye of Prophecy looks that future. A perpetual life-and-death battle; confusion from above and from below—mere confused darkness for us; with here and there some streak of faint lurid light. We see a King perhaps laid aside; not tonsured,—tonsuring is out of fashion now,—but say sent away anywhither, with handsome annual allowance, and stock of smith-tools. We see a Queen and Dauphin, Regent and Minor; a Queen "mounted on horseback," in the din of bat-

* See "Fils Adoptif," vii. 1, 6; Dumont, c 11, 12, 14.
ties, with Moriamur pro rege nostro! "Such a day," Mirabeau writes, "may come."

902. Din of battles, wars more than civil, confusion from above and from below: in such environment the eye of Prophecy sees Comte de Mirabeau, like some Cardinal de Retz, stormfully maintain himself; with head all-devising, heart all-daring, if not victorious, yet unvanquished, while life is left him. The specialties and issues of it, no eye of Prophecy can guess at: it is clouds, we repeat, and tempestuous night; and in the middle of it, now visible, far-darting, now laboring in eclipse, is Mirabeau indomitably struggling to be Cloud-Compeller! —One can say that, had Mirabeau lived, the History of France and of the World had been different. Further, that the man would have needed, as few men ever did, the whole compass of that same "Art of Daring (Art d'Oser)," which he so prized; and likewise that he, above all men then living, would have practiced and manifested it. Finally, that some substantiality, and no empty simulacrum of a formula, would have been the result realized by him, a result you could have loved, a result you could have hated; by no likelihood, a result you could only have rejected with closed lips, and swept into quick forgetfulness forever. Had Mirabeau lived one other year.

CHAPTER VII.

DEATH OF MIRABEAU.

903. But Mirabeau could not live another year, any more than he could live another thousand years.

Men's years are numbered and the tale of Mirabeau's was now complete. Important or unimportant; to be mentioned in World-History for some centuries, or not to be mentioned there beyond a day or two, —it matters not to peremptory Fate. From amid the press of ruddy busy Life, the Pale Messenger beckons silently: wide-spreadiug interests, projects, salvation of French Monarchies, what thing seever man has on hand, he must suddenly quit it all, and go. Wert thou saving French Monarchies: Wert thou blacking shoes on the Pont Neuf! The most important of men cannot stay; did the World's History depend on an hour, that hour is not to be given. Whereby, indeed, it come that these same would-have-beens are mostly a vanity; and the World's History could never in the least be what it would, or might, or should, by any manner of potentiality, but simply and altogether what it is.

904. The fierce wear and tear of such an existence has wasted out the giant oaken strength of Mirabeau. A fret and fever that keeps heart and brain on fire; excess of effort, of excitement; excess of all kinds: labor incessant, almost beyond credibility! "If I had not lived with him," says Dumont, "I never should have known what a man can make of one day, what things may be placed within the interval of twelve hours. A day for this man was more than a week or a month is for others: the mass of things he guided on together was prodigious; from scheming to the executing not a moment lost." —"Monsieur le Comte" said his Secretary to him once, "what you require is impossible." —"Impossible!" —answered he.
starting from his chair, "Ne me dites jamais ce bête de mot (Never name to me that blockhead of a word)." And the social repasts; the dinner which he gives as Commandant National Guards, which "cost five hundred pounds;" alas "the Syrens of the Opera;" and all the ginger that is hot in the mouth:—down what a course is this man hurled! Cannot Mirabeau stop; cannot he fly, and save himself alive? Not there is a Nessus-Shirt on this Hercules; he must storm and burn there without rest, till he be consumed. Human strength, never so Herculean, has its measure. Herald shadows flit pale across the fire-brain of Mirabeau; heralds of the pale repose. While he tosses and storms, straining every nerve, in that sea of ambition and confusion, there comes, somber and still, a monition that for him the issue of it will be swift death.

905. In January last you might see him as President of the Assembly; "his neck wrapt in linen cloths, at the evening session:" there was sick heat of the blood, alternate darkening and flashing in the eyesight; he had to apply leeches, after the morning labor, and preside bandaged. "At parting he embraced me," says Dumont, "with an emotion I had never seen in him: 'I am dying, my friend, dying as by slow fire; we shall perhaps not meet again. When I am gone, they will know what the value of me was. The miseries I have held back will burst from all sides on France.' " Sickness gives louder warning; but cannot be listened to. On the 27th day of March,
Saturday the second day of April, Mirabeau feels that the last of the Days has risen for him; that on this day he has to depart and be no more. His death is Titanic, as his life has been! Lit up, for the last time, in the glare of coming dissolution, the mind of the man is all glowing and burning; utters itself in sayings, such as men long remember. He longs to live, yet acquiesces in death, argues not with the inexorable. His speech is wild and wondrous: unearthly Phantasms dancing now their torch-dance round his soul; the soul itself looking out, fire-radiant, motionless, girt together for that great hour! At times comes a beam of light from him on the world he is quitting. "I carry in my heart the death-dirge of the French Monarchy; the dead remains of it will now be the spoil of the factious." Or again, when he heard the cannon fire, what is characteristic too: "Have we the Achilles's Funeral already?" So likewise, while some friend is supporting him: "Yes, support that head; would I could bequeath it to thee!" For the man dies as he has lived; self-conscious, conscious of a world looking on. He gazes forth on the young Spring, which for him will never be summer. The Sun has risen; he says, "Si ce n'est pas là Dieu, c'est du moins son cousin germain."—Death has mastered the outworks; power of speech is gone; the citadel of the heart still holding out; the moribund giant, passionately, by sign, demands paper and pen; writes his passionate demand for opium, to end these agonies. The sorrowful Doctor shakes his head: "Dormir (To sleep)," writes the other, passionately pointing at it! So dies a gigantic Heathen and Titan; stumbling blindly, undismayed, down to his rest. At half-past eight in the morning Doctor Petit, standing at the foot of the bed, says, "Il no souffre plus." His suffering and his working are now ended.

908. Even so, ye silent Patriot multitudes, all ye men of France; this man is rapt away from you. He has fallen suddenly, without bending till he broke; as a tower falls, smitten by sudden lightning. His word ye shall hear no more, his guidance follow no more. The multitudes depart, heart-struck; spread the sad tidings. How touching is the loyalty of men to their Sovereign Man! All theaters, public amusements close; no joyful meeting can be held in these nights, joy is not for them: the People break in upon private dancing-parties, and sullenly command that they cease. Of such dancing-parties apparently but two came to light; and these also have gone out. The gloom is universal; never in this City was such sorrow for one death; never since that old night when Louis XII. departed, “et les Crieurs des Corps went sounding their bells and crying along the streets: Le bon roi Louis, père du people, est mort (The good King Louis, Father of the People, is dead)!" King Mirabeau is now the lost King; and one may say with little exaggeration, all the People mourns for him.

909. For three days there is low wide moan; weeping in the National Assembly itself. The streets are all mournful; orators mounted on the bornes, with large silent audience, preaching the funeral sermon of the dead. Let no coachman whip fast, distractively with his rolling wheels, or almost at all, through these groups! His traces may be cut; himself and his fare, as incurable Aristocrats, hurled sulkily into the kennels. The born-stone orators speak as it is given them; the Sansculottic People, with its rude soul, listens eager,—as men will to any sermon, or Sermo, when it is a spoken Word meaning a Thing, and not a Babblement meaning No-thing. In the Restaurateur's of the Palais-Royal, the waiter remarks, "Fine weather, Monsieur:"—"Yes, my friend," answers the ancient Man of Letters, "very fine; but Mirabeau is dead." Heave rhythmic threnodies come also from the throats of ballad-singers; are sold on gray-white paper at a sou each. But of Portraits, engraved, painted, hewn and written; of Eulogies, Reminiscences, Biographies, nay Vaudevilles, Dramas and Melodramas, in all Provinces of France, there will, through these coming months, be the due immeasurable crop; thick as the leaves of Spring. Not, that a tincture of burlesque might be in it, is Gobel's Episcopal Mandement wanting; goose Gobel, who has just been made Constitutional Bishop of Paris. A Mandement wherein Carrière alters very strangely with Nomine Domini, and you are, with a grave countenance, invited to "rejoice at possessing in the midst of you a body of Prelates created by Mirabeau, zealous followers of his doctrine, faithful imitators of his virtues." So spakes, 1 "Fils Adoptif," vili. 1. 10; newspapers and excerpts (in "Histoire Parlementaire," ix. 396-400).

and cackles manifold, the Sorrow of France; wailing articulately, inarticulately, as it can, that a Sovereign Man is snatched away. In the National Assembly, when difficult questions are astir, all eyes will "turn mechanically to the place where Mirabeau sat,"—and Mirabeau is absent now.

910. On the third evening of the lamentation, the 4th of April, there is solemn Public Funeral; such as deceased mortal seldom had. Procession of a league in length; of mourners reckoned loosely at 100,000. All roofs are thronged with onlookers, all windows, lamp-irons, branches of trees. "Sadness is painted on every countenance; many persons weep. There is double hedge of National Guards; there is National Assembly in a body; Jacobin Society, and Societies; King's Ministers, Municipal, and all Notabilities, Patriot or Aristocrat. Bonelli is noticeable there, "with his hat on," says, hat drawn over his brow, hiding many thoughts! Slow-wending, in religious silence, the Procession of a league in length, under the level sun-rays, for it is five o'clock, moves and marches; with its sable plumes; itself in a religious silence; but, by fits with the muffled roll of drums, by fits with some long-drawn wall of music, and strange new clangor of trombones, and metallic dirge-voice; amid the infinite hum of men. In the Church of Saint-Eustache, there is funeral oration by Cerutti, and discharge of fire-arms, which "brings down pieces of the plaster." Thence, forward again to the Church of Sainte-Geneviève; which has been consecrated, by superior decree, on the spur of this time, into a Pantheon for the Great Men of the

911. Tenant, alas, who inhabits but at will, and shall be cast out. For, in these days of convulsion and dejection, not even the dust of the dead is permitted to rest. Voltaire's bones are, by and by, to be carried from their stolen grave in the Abbey of St. Genevieve, to an eager grave, in Paris his birth-city: all mortals processioning and perorating there; cars drawn by eight white horses, goadsters in classical costume, with fillets and wheat-cars enough;—tho’ the weather is of the wettest.* Evangelist Joan Jacques too, as is most proper, must be dug up from Ermenouville, and processioned, with pomp, with sensibility, to the Pantheon of the Fatherland. He and others: while again Mirabeau, we say, is cast forth from it, happily incapable of being replaced; and rests now, irreconcilable, buried hastily at dead of night in the central part of the Churchyard Sainte-Catherine, in the Suburb Saint-Marceau,* to be disturbed no farther.

912. So blazes out, far-seen, a Man’s Life, and besides ashes and a caput mortuum, in this World-Pyre, which we name French Revolution: not the first that consumed itself there; nor, by thousands and many millions, the last! A man who “had swallowed all formulas,” who, in these strange times and circumstances, felt called to live Titanically, and also to die so. As he, for his part, had swallowed all formulas, what Formula is there, never so comprehensive, that will express truly the plus and the minus of him, give us the accurate net-result of him? There is hitherto none such. Moralities not a few must shriek condemnatory over this Mirabeau; the Morality by which he could be judged has not yet got uttered in the speech of men. We will say this of him again: That he is a Reality and no Simulacrum; a living Son of Nature our general Mother; not a hollow Artifice, and mechanism of Conventionalities, son of nothing, brother to nothing. In which little word, let the earnest man, walking sorrowful in a world mostly of “Stuffed Clothes-suits,” that chatter and grin meaningless on him, quite ghastly to the earnest soul,—think what significance there is!

913. Of men who, in such sense, are alive, and see with eyes, the number is now not great: It may be well, if in this huge French Revolution itself, with its all-developing fury, we find some Three. Mortals driven rabid we find; sputtering the acridest logic; baring their breast to the battle-hall, their neck to the guillotine:—of whom it is so painful to say that they too are still, in good part, manufactured Formalities, not Facts but Hearsays!

914. Honor to the strong man, in these ages, who has shaken himself loose of shams, and is something. For in the way of being worthy, the first condition surely is that one be. Let Cant cease, at all risks and at all costs: till Cant cease, nothing else can begin. Of human Criminals, in these centuries, writes the Moralist, I find but one unforgivable: the Quack.

'Hateful to God," as divine Dante sings, "and to the Enemies of God.

"A Dio sospetto ed a nemici suoi!"

915. But whoever will, with sympathy, which is the first essential toward insight, look at this questionable Mirabeau, may find that there lay verily in him, as the basis of all, a Sincerity, great free Earnestness; nay, call it Honesty; for the man did before all things see, with that clear flashing vision, into what was, into what existed as fact; and did, with his wild heart, follow that and no other. Whereby on what ways soever he travels and struggles, often enough falling, he is still a brother man. Hate him not; thou canst not hate him! Shining through such soil and tarnish and now victorious effulgent, and oftenest struggling eclipsed, the light of genius itself is in this man; which was never yet base and hateful; but at worst was lamentable, lovable with pity. They say that he was ambitious, that he wanted to be Minister. It is most true. And was he not simply the one man in France who could have done any good as Minister? Not vanity alone, not pride alone; far from that! Wild burstings of affection were in this great heart; of airy lightning and soft dew of pity. So sunk bemired in wretchedest defacements, it may be said of him, like the Magdalen of old, that he loved much; his Father, the harshest of old crabbed men, he loved with warmth, with veneration.

916. Be it that his falls and follies are manifold,—as himself often lamented even with tears.* Alas, is not the Life of every such man already a poetic Tragedy; made up "of Fate and of one's own Deserving," of Schicksal und eigene Schuld; full of the elements of Pity and Fear? This brother man if not Epic for us, is Tragic; if not great, is large; large in his qualities, world-large in his destinies. Whom other men, recognizing him as such, may, through long times, remember, and draw nigh to examine and consider: these, in their several dialects, will say of him and sing of him,—till the right thing be said; and so the Formula that can judge him be no longer an undiscovered one.

917. Here then the wild Gabriel Honoré drops from the tissue of our History; not without a tragic farewell. He is gone; the flower of the wild Ricqueti or Arrighetti kindred; which seems as if in him, with one last effort, it had done its best, and then expired, or sunk down to the undistinguished level. Crabbed old Marquis Mirabeau, the Friend of Men, sleeps sound. The Bailli Mirabeau, worthy Uncle, will soon die forlorn, alone. Barrel Mirabeau, already gone across the Rhine, his Regiment of Emigrants will drive nigh desperate. "Barrel Mirabeau," says a biographer of his, "went indignantly across the Rhine, and drilled Emigrant Regiments. But as he sat one morning in his tent, sour of stomach doubtless and of heart, meditating in Tartarian humor on the turn things took, a certain Captain or Subaltern demanded admittance on business. Such Captain is refused; he again demands, with refusal; and then again; till Colonel Viscount Barrel Mirabeau, blazing up into a mere burning brandy-barrel, clutches his sword, and tumbles out on this canaille of an intruder,—alas, on the canaille of an intruder's sword-point, who had drawn with swift dexterity; and dies, and the Newspapers name it apoplexy and alarming accident." So die the Mirabeaus.

918. New Mirabeaus one hears not of: the wild kindred, as we said, is gone out with its greatest. As families and kindreds sometimes do; producing after long ages of unnoted notability, some living quintessence of all the qualities they had, to flame forth as a man world-noted; after whom they rest as if exhausted; the scepter passing to others. The chosen Last of the Mirabeaus is gone; the chosen man of France is gone. It was he who shook old France from its basis; and, as if with his single hand, has held it toppling there, still unfallen. What things depended on that one man! He is as a ship suddenly shivered on sunk rocks: much swims on the waste waters, far from help.

919. The French Monarchy may now therefore be considered as, in all human probability, lost; as struggling henceforth in blindness as well as weakness, the last light of reasonable guidance having gone out. What remains of resources their poor Majesties will waste still further, in uncertain loitering and wavering. Mirabeau himself had to complain that they only gave him half confidence, and always had some plan within his plan. Had they fled frankly with him to Rouen or anywhither, long ago! They may fly now with chance immeasurably lessened; which will go on lessening toward absolute zero. Decide, O Queen; poor Louis can decide nothing; execute this flight-project, or at least abandon it. Correspondence with Bouillé there has been enough; what profits consulting and hypotheses, while all around is in fierce activity of practice? The Rustic sits waiting till the river run dry: alas, with you it is not a common river, but a Nile inundation; snows melting in the unseen mountains; till all, and you where you sit, be submerged.
920. Many things invite to flight. The voice of Journals invites; Royalist Journals proudly hinting it as a threat, Patriot Journals rabidly denouncing it as a terror. Mother Society, waxing more and more emphatic, invites;—so emphatic that, as was prophesied, Lafayette and your limited Patriots have ere long to branch off from her, and form themselves into Feuillans; with infinite public controversy; the victory in which, doubtful though it look, will remain with the unlimited Mother. Moreover, ever since the Day of Poniards, we have seen unlimited Patriotism openly equipping itself with arms. Citizens denied “activity,” which is facetiously made to signify a certain weight of purse, cannot buy blue uniforms, and be Guardsmen; but man is greater than blue cloth; man can fight, if need be, in multi-form cloth, or even almost without cloth,—as Sans-culotte. So pikes continue to be hammered, whether those Dirks of improved structure with barbs be “meant for the West-India market,” or not meant. Men bent, the wrong way, their plowshares into swords. Is there not what we may call an “Austrian Committee” (Comité Autrichien), sitting daily and nightly in the Tuileries? Patriotism, by vision and suspicion, knows it too well! If the King fly, will there not be Aristocrat-Austrian invasion; butchery; replacement of Feudalism; wars more than civil? The hearts of men are saddened and maddened.

921. Dissident Priests likewise give trouble enough. Expelled from their Parish Churches, where Constitutional Priests, elected by the Public, have replaced them, these unhappy persons resort to Convents of Nuns, or other such receptacles; and there, on Sabbath, collecting assemblages of Anti-Constitutional individuals, who have grown devoted all on a sudden,* they worship or pretend to worship in their strait-laced contumacious manner; to the scandal of Patriotism. Dissident Priests, passing along with their sacred wafer for the dying, seem wishful to be massacred in the streets; wherein Patriotism will not gratify them. Slighter palm of martyrdom, however, shall not be denied; martyrdom not of massacre, yet of fustigation. At the refractory places of worship, Patriot men appear; Patriot women with strong hazel wands, which they apply. Shut thy eyes, O Reader; see not this misery, peculiar to these later times,—of martyrdom without sincerity, with only cant and contumacy! A dead Catholic Church is not allowed to lie dead; no, it is galvanized into the detestablest death-life; whereat Humanity, we say, shuts its eyes. For the Patriot women take their hazel wands, and fustigate, amid laughter of bystanders, with alacrity: broad bottom of Priests; alas, Nuns too, reversed and cotillons retrousés! The National Guard does what it can; Municipality “invokes the Principles of Toleration”; grants Dissident worshippers the Church of the Théatins: promising protection. But it is to no purpose: at the door of that Théatins Church appears a Placard, and suspended atop, like Plebeian Consular fasces—a Bundle of Rods! The Principles of Toleration must do the best they may; but no Dissident man shall worship contumaciously; there is a Ple-biscuitum to that effect; which, though unspoken, is like the laws of the Medes and Persians. Dissident contumacious Priests ought not to be harbored, even in private, by any man: the Club of the Cordeliers openly denounces Majesty himself as doing it.*

922. Many things invite to flight; but probably this thing above all others, that it has become im­possible! On the 15th of April, notice is given that his Majesty, who has suffered much from catarrh lately, will enjoy the Spring weather, for a few days, at Saint-Cloud. Out at Saint-Cloud? Wishing to celebrate his Easter, his Pâques, or Pasch, there; with refractory Anti-Constitutional Dissidents?—wishing rather to make off for Compiègne, and thence to the Frontiers? As were, in good sooth, perhaps feasible, or would once have been; nothing but some two chasseurs attending you; chasseurs easily cor­rupted! It is a pleasant possibility, execute it or not. Men say there are 30,000 Chevaliers of the Pomard lurking in the woods there: lurking in the woods, and 30,000,—for the human Imagination is not fettered. But now, how easily might these, dashing out on La­fayette, snatch off the Hereditary Representative; and rollaway with him, after the manner of a whirl-blast, whither they listed!—Enough, it were well the King did not go. Lafayette is forewarned and forearmed: but, indeed, is the risk his only; or his and all France's?

923. Monday the 18th of April is come; the Easter Journey to Saint-Cloud shall take effect.

* Newspapers of April and June, 1791 (in "Histoire Par­lementaire," iv. 416: x. 219).
perilous manner; so that her Majesty has to plead passionately from the carriage-window.

925 Order cannot be heard; cannot be followed; National Guards know not how to act. Center Grenadiers of the Observatoire Battalion, are there; not on duty; alas, in quasi-mutiny; speaking rude disobedient words; threatening the mounted Guards with sharp shot if they hurt the people. Lafayette mounts and dismounts; runs haranguing, panting; on the verge of despair. For an hour and three-quarters; "seven quarters of an hour," by the Tuileries Clock! Desperate Lafayette will open a passage, were it by the cannon's mouth, if his Majesty will order. Their Majesties, counseled to it by Royalist friends, by Patriot foes, dismount; and retire in, with heavy indignant heart; giving up the enterprise. Maison-bouche may eat that cooked dinner themselves: his Majesty shall not see Saint-Cloud this day,—nor any day.

926 The pathetic fable of imprisonment in one's own Palace has become as sad a fact, then? Majesty complains to Assembly; Municipality deliberates, proposes to petition or address; Sections respond with sullen brevity of negation. Lafayette flings down his commission; appears in civic pepper-and-salt frock; and cannot be flattered back again; not in less than three days; and by unheard-of entreaty; National Guards kneeling to him, and declaring that it is not sycophancy, that they are free men kneeling here to the Statue of Liberty.

CHAPTER II.

EASTER AT PARIS.

927 For above a year, ever since March, 1790, it would seem, there has hovered a project of Flight before the royal mind; and ever and anon has been condensing itself into something like a purpose; but this or the other difficulty always vaporized it again. It seems so full of risks, perhaps of civil war itself; above all, it cannot be done without effort. Somnolent laziness will not serve: to fly, if not in a leather vache, one must verily stir oneself. Better to adopt that Constitution of theirs; execute it so as to show all men that it is executable? Better or not so good: surely it is easier.

To all difficulties you need only say, There is a lion in the path, behold your Constitution will not act! For a somnolent person it requires no effort to counterfeit death, as Dame de Stael and Friends of Liberty can see the King's Government long doing, faisant la mort.

928 Nay now, when desire whetted by difficulty has brought the matter to a head, and the royal mind no longer halts between two, what can come of it?
VARENNES.

Grant that poor Louis were safe with Bouillé, what, on the whole, could he look for there? Exasperated Tickets of Entry answer: Much, all. But cold Reason answer: Little, almost nothing. Is not loyalty a law of Nature? ask the Tickets of Entry. Is not love of your King, and even death for him, the glory of all Frenchmen,—except these few Démocrates? Let Démocrat Constitution-builders see what they will do without their Keystone; and France rend its hair having lost the Hereditary Representative.

929. Thus will King Louis fly; one sees not reasonably toward what. As a maltreated Boy, shall we say, who, having a Stepmother, rushes sulky into the wide world; and will wring the paternal heart?—Poor Louis escapes from known unsupportable evils, to an unknown mixture of good and evil, colored by Hope. He goes, as Rabelais did when dying, to seek a great May-be; Je vais chercher un grand Peut-être! As not only the sulky Boy but the wise grown Man is obliged to do, so often, in emergencies.

930. For the rest, there is still no lack of stimulants, and step-dame maltreatments, to keep one's resolutions at the due pitch. Factious disturbances cease not; as indeed how can they, unless authoritatively conjured, in a Revolt which is by nature bottomless? If the ceasing of faction be the price of the King's somnolence, he may awake when he will and take wing.

931. Remark, in any case, what somersets and contortions a dead Catholicism is making,—skilfully galvanized: hideous, and even piteous to behold!

EASTER AT PARIS.

Jurant and Dissident, with their shaved crowns, argue, frothing everywhere; or, are ceasing to argue, and stripping for battle. In Paris was scourging while need continued; contrariwise, in the Morbihan of Brittany, without scourging, armed Peasants are up, roused by pulpit-drum, they know not why. General Dumouriez, who has got missioned thitherward, finds all in sour heat of darkness; finds also that explanation and conciliation will still do much.*

932. But again, consider this: that his Holiness, Pius Sixth, has seen good to excommunicate Bishop Talleyrand! Surely, we will say then, considering it, there is no living or dead Church in the Earth that has not the indubitablest right to excommunicate Talleyrand. Pope Pius has right and might in his way. But truly so likewise has Father Adam, ci-devant Marquis Saint-Huruge, in his way. Behold, therefore, on the 4th of May, in the Palais Royal, a mixed loud-sounding multitude; in the middle of whom, Father Adam, bull-voiced Saint-Huruge, in white hat, towers visible and audible. With him it is said, walks Journalist Gorsas, walk many others of the washed sort; for no authority will interfere. Pius Sixth, with his plush and tiara, and power of the Keys, they bear aloft; of natural size,—made of lath and combustible gum. Royon, the King's Friend, is borne too in effigy; with a pile of Newspaper King's Friends, condemned Numbers of the Ami-du-Roi; fit fuel of the sacrifice. Speeches are spoken: a judgment is held, a doom proclaimed, audible in bulk-voice, toward the four winds. And thus, amid great shouting, the holocaust is consummated, under the summer sky; and our lath-and-gum Holiness, with the attendant victims, mounts up in flame, and sinks down in ashes; a decomposed Pope; and right or might, among all the parties, has better or worse accomplished itself, as it could. But, on the whole, reckoning from Martin Luther in the Market-place of Wittenberg to Marquis Saint-Huruge in this Palais Royal of Paris, what a journey have we gone; into what strange territories has it carried us! No Authority can now interfere: Nay, Religion herself mourning for such things, may after all ask, What have I to do with them?

933. In such extraordinary manner does dead Catholicism somerset and caper, skillfully galvanized. For does the reader inquire into the subject-matter of controversy in this case; what the difference between Orthodoxy or My-doxy and Heterodoxy or Thy-doxy might here be? My-doxy is, that an august National Assembly can equalize the extent of Bishoprics; that an equalized Bishop, his Creed and Formularies being left quite as they were, can swear Fidelity to King, Law, and Nation, and so become a constitutional Bishop. Thy-doxy, if thou be Dissident, is that he cannot; but that he must become an accursed thing. Human ill-nature needs but some Homoiousian iota, or even the pretense of one; and will flow copiously through the eye of a needle: thus always must mortals go jargoning and fuming.

to hand.* All which, you would say, augurs ill for the prospering of the enterprise. But the whims of women and queens must be humored.

336. Bouillé, on his side, is making a fortified Camp at Montmédi; gathering Royal-Allemand, and all manner of other German and true French Troops thither, "to watch the Austrians." His Majesty will not cross the frontiers, unless on compulsion. Neither shall the Emigrants be much employed, hateful as they are to all people. Nor shall old war-god Broglie have any hand in the business; but solely our brave Bouillé; to whom, on the day of meeting, a Marshal's Baton shall be delivered, by a rescued King, amid the shouting of all the troops. In the meanwhile, Paris being so suspicious, were it not perhaps good to write your Foreign Ambassadors an ostensible Constitutional Letter; desiring all Kings and men to take heed that King Louis loves the Constitution, that he has voluntarily sworn, and does again swear, to maintain the same, and will reckon those his enemies who effect to say otherwise? Such a Constitutional Circular is dispatched by Couriers, is communicated confidentially to the Assembly, and printed in all Newspapers, with the finest effect. Simulation and dissimulation mingle extensively in human affairs.

937 We observe, however, that Count Fersen is often using his Ticket of Entry; which surely he has clear right to do. A gallant Soldier and Swede, devoted to this fair Queen;—as indeed the Highest Swede now is. Has not King Gustav, famed fiery Chevalier du Nord, sworn himself, by the old laws of chivalry, her Knight? He will descend on fire-wings, of Swedish musketry, and deliver her from these foul dragons,—if, alas, the assassin's pistol intervene not!

938. But, in fact, Count Fersen does seem a likely young soldier, of alert decisive ways: he circulates widely, seen, unseen; and has business on hand. Also Colonel the Duke de Choiseul, nephew of Choiseul the great, of Choiseul the now deceased; and Engineer Goguelat are passing and repassing between Metz and the Tuileries: and Letters go in cipher,—one of them, a most important one, hard to decipher; Fersen having ciphered it in haste.* As for Duke de Villequier, he is gone ever since the Day of Poniard; but his Apartment is useful for her Majesty.

939. On the other side, poor Commandant Guivon, watching at the Tuileries, second in National command, sees several things hard to interpret. It is the same Gouvion who sat, long months ago, at the Town-hall, gazing helpless into that Insurrection of Women; motionless, as the brave stabled steer when conflagration rises, till Usher Maillard snatched his drum. Sincerer Patriot there is not; but many a shifter. He, if Dame Campan gossip credibly, is paying some similitude of love-court to a certain false Chambermaid of the Palace, who betrays much to him: the Nécessaire, the clothes, the packing of...

jewels,—could he understand it when betrayed. Helpless Gouvion gazes with sincere glassy eyes into it; stirs up his sentries to vigilance; walks restless to and fro; and hopes the best.

940. But, on the whole, one finds that, in the second week of June, Colonel de Choiseul is privately in Paris; having come "to see his children." Also that Fersen has got a stupendous new Coach built, of the kind named Berline; done by the first artists; according to a model: they bring it home to him, in Choiseul's presence; the two friends take a proof-drive in it, along the streets; in meditative mood; then send it up to "Madame Sullivan, in the Rue de Clichy," far North, to wait there till wanted. Apparently a certain Russian Baronne de Kerff, with Waiting-woman, Valet, and two Children, will travel homeward with some state: in whom these young military gentlemen take interest? A Passport has been procured for her; and much assistance shown, with Coach-builders and such-like;—so helpful-polite are young military men. Fersen has likewise purchased a Chaise fit for two, at least for two waiting-maids; further, certain necessary horses; one would say, he is himself quitting France, not without delay? "We ... in Assumption Church, here at Paris, to the joy of all the world. For which same day, moreover, brave Bouillé, at Metz, as we find, has invited a party of friends to dinner; but indeed is gone from home, in the interim, over to Montmédy. 941. These are of the Phenomena, or visual Appearances, of this wide-working terrestrial world: which truly is all phenomenal, what they call spectral: and never rests any moment: one never at any moment can know why. 942. On Monday night, the 20th of June, 1791, about eleven o'clock, there is many a hackney-coach, and glass-coach (carrosse de remise), still rumbling, or at rest, on the streets of Paris. But of all glass-coaches, we recommend this to thee, O Reader, which stands drawn up in the Rue de l'Echelle, hard by the Carrousel and outgate of the Tuileries; in the Rue de l'Echelle that then was; "opposite Ronsin the saddler's door," as if waiting for a fare there! Not long does it wait: a hooded Dame, with two hooded Children has issued from Villequier's door, where no sentry walks, into the Tuileries Court-of-Princes; into the Carrousel; into the Rue de l'Echelle; where the Glass-coachman readily admits them; and again waits. Not long; another Dame, likewise hooded or shrouded, leaning on a servant, issues in the same manner; bids the servant good-night; and is, in the same manner, by the Glass-coachman, cheerfully admitted. Whither go so many Dames? 'Tis his Majesty's Couchée, Majesty just gone to bed, and all the Palace-world is retiring home. But the Glass-coachman still waits; his face seemingly incomplete. 943. By and by, we note a thick-set Individual, in round hat and peruke, arm-in-arm with some servant, seemingly of the Runner or Courier sort; he also issues through Villequier's door; starts a shoe-buckle as he passes one of the sentries, stoops down to chisp it again; is however by the Glass-coachman, still more cheerfully admitted. And now, is his fare complete? Not yet; the Glass-coachman still waits.
—Alas! and the false Chambermaid has warned Gouvion that she thinks the Royal Family will fly
this very night; and Gouvion, distrusting his own glazed eyes, has sent express for Lafayette; and Lafayette's Carriage, flaring with lights, rolls this moment through the inner Arch of the Carrousel,— where a Lady shaded in broad gypsy-hat, and leaning on the arm of a servant, also of the Runner or Courier sort, stands aside to let it pass, and has even the whim to touch a spoke of it with her badine,— light little magic rod which she calls badine, such as the Beautiful then wore. The flare of Lafayette's Carriage rolls past: all is found quiet in the Court-of-princes; sentries at their post; Majesties' Apartments closed in smooth rest. Your false Chamber-maid must have been mistaken? Watch thou, Gou-vion, with Argus's vigilance; for, of a truce, treachy is within these walls.

944. But where is the Lady that stood aside in gypsy-hat, and touched the wheel-spoke with her badine? O Reader, that Lady that touched the wheel-spoke was the Queen of France! She has issued safe through that inner Arch, into the Carrousel itself; but not into the Rue de l'Echelle. Flurried by the rattle and encounter, she took the right hand, not the left; neither she nor her Courier knows Paris;
he indeed is no Courier, but a loyal stupid ci-devant Body-guard disguised as one. They are off, quite wrong, over the Pont Royal and River; roaming disconsolate in the Rue du Bac; far from the Glass-coachman, who still waits. Waits, with flutter of heart; with thoughts—which he must button close up, under his jarvie-surtout!

945. Midnight clangs from all the City-steeples;
one precious hour has been spent so; most mortals are asleep. The Glass-coachman waits; and in what mood! A brother jarvie drives up, enters into conversation; is answered cheerfully in jarvie-dialect:
the brothers of the whip exchange a pinch of snuff;
decline drinking together; and part with good-night.
Be the Heavens blest! here at length is the Queen-lady, in gypsy-hat; safe after perils; who has had to inquire her way. She too is admitted; her Courier jumps aloft, as the other, who is also a disguised Body-guard, has done; and now, O Glass-coachman of a thousand,—Count-Fersen, for the Reader sees it is thou,—drive!

946. Dust shall not stick to the hoofs of Fersen;
ckack! cracker! the Glass-coach rattles, and every soul breathes lighter. But is Fersen on the right road?
North-eastward, to the Barrier of Saint-Martin and Metz Highway, thither were we bound: and lo, he drives right Northward! The royal Individual, in round hat and peruke, sits astonished; but right or wrong, there is no remedy. Crack, crack, we go incessant, through the slumbering City. Seldom, since

* Weber, ii. 310-342; Choiseul, pp. 44-56.
Paris rose out of mud, or the Long-haired Kings went in Bullock-carts, was there such a drive. Mortals on each hand of you, close by, stretched out horizontal, dormant; and we alive and quaking! Crack, crack, through the Rue de Grammont; across the Boulevard; up the Rue de la Chaussée d'Antin,—these windows, all silent, of Number 42. were Mirabeau's. Toward the Barrier, not of Saint-Martin, but of Clichy on the utmost North! Patience ye royal Individuals; Fersen understands what he is about. Passing up the Rue de Clichy, he alights for one moment at Madame Sullivan's: "Did Count Fersen's Coachman get the Baroness de Korff's new Berline?"—"Gone with it an hour-and-half ago," grumbles responsive the drowsy Porter.—"C'est bien." Yes, it is well;—though had not such hour-and-half been lost, it were still better. Forth therefore, O Fersen, fast, by the Barrier de Clichy; then Eastward along the Outer Boulevard, what horses and whipcord can do!

947. Thus Fersen drives, through the ambrosial night. Sleeping Paris is now all on the right-hand of him; silent except for some snoring hum: and now he is Eastward as far as the Barrier de Saint-Martin; looking earnestly for Baroness de Korff's Berline. This Heaven's Berline he at length does descry, drawn up with its six horses, his own German Coachman waiting on the box. Right, thou good German; now haste, whither thou knowest?—And as for us of the Glass-coach, haste too, O haste; much time is already lost! The august Glass-coach fare, six Insides, hastily packs itself into the new Berline; two Body-guard Couriers behind. The Glass-coach itself is turned adrift, it heads toward the City; to wander whither it lists,—and be found next morning tumbled in a ditch. But Fersen is on the new box, with its brave new hammer-cloths; flourishing his whip; he bolts forward toward Bondy. There a third and final Body-guard Courier of ours ought surely to be, with post-horses ready-ordered. There likewise ought that purchased Chaise, with the two Waiting-maids and their bandboxes, to be; whom also her Majesty could not travel without. Swift, thou deft Fersen, and may the Heavens turn it well!

948. Once more, by Heaven's blessing, it is all well. Here is the sleeping Hamlet of Bondy; Chaise with Waiting-women; horses all ready, and postillions with their churn-boots, impatient in the dewy dawn. Brief harnessing done, the postillions with their churn-boots vault into the saddles; brandish circularly their little noisy whips. Fersen, under his jarvie-surtout, bends in lowly silent reverence of adieu; royal hands wave speechless inexpressible response; Baroness de Korff's Berline, with the Royalty of France, bounds off: forever, as it proved. Deft Fersen dashes obliquely Northward, through the country, toward Bougret; gains Bougret, finds his German Coachman and chariot waiting there; cracks off, and drives undiscovered into unknown space. A deft active man, we say; what he undertook to do is nimbly and successfully done.

949. And so the Royalty of France is actually fled? This precious night, the shortest of the year, it flies, and drives! Baroness de Korff is, at bottom, Dame de Tourzel, Governess of the Royal Children; she who came hooded with the two hooded little ones; little Dauphin; little Madame Royaix, known long afterward as Duchesse d'Angouleme. Baroiness de Korff's Waiting-maid is the Queen in gypsy-hat. The royal individual in round hat and peruke, he is Valet for the time being. That other hooded Dame, styled Travelling-companion, is kind Sister Elizabeth; she had sworn, long since, when the Insurrection of Women was, that only death should part her and them. And so they rush there, not too impetuously, through the Wood of Bondy—over a Rubicon in their own and France's History.

950. Great; though the future is all vague! If we reach Bouillé? If we do not reach him? O Louis! and this all round thee is the great slumbering Earth (and overhead, the great watchful Heaven); the slumbering Wood of Bondy—where Longhaired Childeric Donathing was struck through with iron,* not unreasonably, in a world like ours. These peaked stone-towers are Raincy; towers of wicket D'Orléans. All slumbers save the multiplex rustle of our new Berline. Loose-skirted scarecrow of an Herb-merchant, with his ass and early greens, toilsomely plodding, seems the only creature we meet. But right ahead the great North-east sends up evermore his gray brindled dawn: from dewy branch, birds here and there, with short deep warble, salute the coming Sun. Stars fade out, and Galaxies; Street-lamps of the City of God. The Universe, O my brothers, is flinging wide its portals for the Levee of the GREAT HIGH KING. Thou, poor King Louis, farest nevertheless, as mortals do, toward Orient lands of Hope; and the Tuileries with its Levees, and France and the Earth itself, is but a larger kind of dog-hutch,—occasionally going rabid.

CHAPTER IV.

ATTITUDE.

851. But in Paris, at six in the morning; when some Patriot Deputy, warned by a billet, awoke La- fayette, and they went to the Tuileries?—Imagination may paint, but words cannot, the surprise of Lafayette; or with what bewilderment helpless Gonvion rolled glassy Argus's eyes, discerning now that his false Chambermaid had told true!

952. However, it is to be recorded that Paris, thanks to an august National Assembly, did, on this seeming doomsday, surpass itself. Never, according to Historian eye-witnesses, was there seen such an "imposing attitude."* Sections all "in permanence;" our Town-hall too, having first, about ten o'clock, fired three solemn alarm-cannons: above all, our National Assembly! National Assembly, likewise permanent, decides what is needful; with unanimous consent, for the Coté Droit sits dumb, afraid of the Lanterne. Decides with a calm promptitude, which rises toward the sublime. One must needs vote, for the thing is self-evident, that his Majesty has been abdicated, or spirited away, "enlevé," by some person or persons unknown: in which case, what will the Constitution have us do? Let us return to first principles, as we always say: "revenons aux principes."

953. By first or by second principles, much is promptly decided: Ministers are sent for, instructed how to continue their functions; Lafayette is examined; and Gouvion, who gives a most helpless account, the best he can. Letters are found written: one Letter, of immense magnitude; all in his Majesty's hand, and evidently of his Majesty's own composition; addressed to the National Assembly. It details with earnestness, with a childlike simplicity, what woes his Majesty has suffered. Woes great and small: A Necker seen applauded, a Majesty not; then insurrection; want of due furniture in Tuileries Palace; want of due cash in Civil List, general want of cash, of furniture and order; anarchy everywhere: Deficit never yet, in the smallest, "choked or comblé"—wherefore, in brief, his Majesty has retired toward a place of Liberty; and leaving Sanctions, Federation, and what Oaths there may be, to shift for themselves, does now refer—to what, thinks an august Assembly? To that "Declaration of the 23d of June," with its "Seul il fera (He alone will make his People happy)."

954. By such sublime calmness, the terror of the People is calmed. These gleaming Pike-forests, which bristled fateful in the early sun, disappear again; the far-sounding Street-orators cease, or spout milder. We are to have a civil war; let us have it then. The King is gone, but National Assembly, but France and we remain. The People also takes a great attitude; the People also is calm; motionless as a couchant lion. With but a few broodings, some waggingsof the tail; to show what it will do! Cazalès, for instance, was beset by street-groups, and cries of Lanterne; but National Patrols easily delivered him. Likewise all King's effigies and statues, at least stucco ones, get abolished. Even King's names; the word Roi fades suddenly out of all shop-signs; the Royal Bengal Tiger itself, on the Boulevards, becomes the National Bengal one, Tiger National.*

955. How great is a calm couchant People! On the morrow, men will say to one another • "We have no King, yet we slept sound enough." On the morrow, fervent Achille de Châtelet, and Thomas Paine the rebellious Needleman, shall have the walls of Paris profusely plastered with their Placard, announcing that there must be a Republic. Need we * "Walpoliana."
† Dumont, c. 16.
That Lafayette too, though at first menaced by Pikes, has taken a great attitude, or indeed the greatest of all? Scouts and Aides-de-camp fly forth, vague, in quest and pursuit; young Romansf toward Valenciennes, though with small hope.

Thus Paris; sublimely calmed, in its bereavement. But from the Messageries Royales, in all Mail-bags, radiates forth far-darting the electric news: Our Hereditary Representative is flown. Laugh black Royalists: yet be it in your sleeve only; lest Patriotism notice, and waxing frantic, lower the Lanterne! In Paris alone is a sublime National Assembly with its calmness; truly, other places must take it as they can; with open mouth and eyes; with panic cackling, with wrath, with conjecture. How each one of those dull leathern Diligences, with its leathern bag and "The King is fled," furrows up smooth France as it goes; through town and hamlet, ruffles the smooth public mind into quivering agitation of death-terror; then lumbers on, as if nothing had happened! Along all highways; toward the utmost borders; till all France is ruffled,—roughened up (metaphorically speaking) into one enormous, desperate minded, red gurgling Turkey Cock.

"For example, it is under cloud of night that the leathern Monster reaches Nantes; deep sunk in sleep. The word spoken rouses all Patriot men. General Dumouriez, enveloped in roquelaure, has descend from his bedroom; finds the Street covered with "four or five thousand citizens in their shirts." Here and there a faint farthing rushlight, hastily kindled; and so many swart-featured haggard faces with nightcaps pushed back; and the more or less flowing drapery of nightshirt: open-mouthed till the General say his word! And overaid, as always, the Great Bear is turning so quiet round Bootes; steady, indifferent as the leathern Diligence itself. Take comfort, ye men of Nantes; Bootes and the steady Bear are turning; ancient Atlantic still sends his brine, loud-billowing, up your Loire stream; brandy shall be hot in the stomach: this is not the Last of the Days, but one before the Last.—The fools! If they knew what was doing, in these very instants, also by candle-light, in the far Northeast!

Perhaps, we may say, the most terrified man in Paris or France is—who thinks the Reader?—sea-green Robespierre. Double paleness, with the shadow of gibbets and halters, oversets the sea-green features: it is too clear to him that there is to be "a Saint-Bartholomew of Patriots," that in four-and-twenty hours he will not be in life. These horrid anticipations of the soul he is heard uttering at Pétion's: by a notable witness. By Madame Roland, namely; her whom we saw, last year, radiant at the Lyons Federation. These four months, the Rolands have been in Paris; arranging with Assembly Committees the Municipal affairs of Lyons, affairs all sunk in debt; communing, the while, as was most natural, with the best Patriot to be found here, with our Brisots, Pétions, Durot, Robespierres: who were wont to come to us, says the fair Hostess, four evenings in the week. They, running about, busier than ever this day, would fain have comforted the sea-green man; spoke of Achille de Châtelet's Placard; of a Journal to be called The Republican; of preparing men's minds for a Republic. "A Republic?" said the Sea-green, with one of his dry husky, unsportful laughs, "What is that?" O sea-green Incorruptible, thou shalt see!

CHAPTER V.

THE NEW BERLINE.

959. But scouts, all this while, and aids-de-camp, have flown forth faster than the leathern Diligences. Young Ronceuf, as we said, was off early toward Valenciennes; distracted Villagers seize him, as a traitor with a finger of his own in the plot; drag him back to the Town-hall; to the National Assembly, which speedily grants a new passport. Nay now, that same scarecrow of an Herb-merchant with his ass has bethought him of the grand new Berline seen in the Wood of Bondy; and delivered evidence of it; furnished with new passport, is sent forth with double speed on a hopefuler track; by Bondy, Claye and Châlons, toward Metz, to track the new Berline; and gallops (a franc étrier).

960. Miserable new Berline! Why could not Royalty go in some old Berline similar to that of other men? Flying for life, one does not stickle about his vehicle. Monsieur, in a commonplace traveling-carriages is off Northwards; Madame, his Princess, in another, with variation of route; they cross one another while changing horses, without look of recognition; and reach Flanders, no man questioning them. Precisely in the same manner, beautiful Princess de Lamballe set off, about the same hour; and will reach England safe — would she had continued there! The beautiful, the good, but the unfortunate reserved for a frightful end!

961. All runs along, unmolested, speedy, except only the new Berline. Huge leathern vehicle—huge Argosy, let us say, or Acapulco ship; with its heavy stern-boat of Chaise-and-pair; with its three yellow Pilot-boats of mounted Body-guard Couriers, rocking aimless round it and ahead of it, to guide! It lurches along, luriously with stress, at a snail's pace; noted of all the world. The Body-guard Couriers, in their yellow liveries, go prancing and clattering; loyal but stupid; unacquainted with all things. Stoppages occur; and breakages, to be repaired at Etoges. King Louis, too, will dismount, will walk up hills, and enjoy the blessed sunshine—with eleven horses and double drink-money, and all furtherances of Nature and Art, it will be found that Royalty, flying for life, accomplishes Sixty-nine miles in Twenty-two incessant hours. Slow Royalty! And yet not a minute of these hours but is precious; on minutes hang the destinies of Royalty now.

962. Readers, therefore, can judge in what humor Duke de Choiseul might stand waiting, in the village of Pont-de-Sommevelle, some leagues beyond Châlons, hour after hour, now when the day bends...
Visibly westward. Choiseul drove out of Paris, in all privity, ten hours before their Majesties' fixed time; his Hussars, led by Engineer Goguelat, are here daily, come "to escort a Treasure that is expected;" but, hour after hour, is no Baroness de Korff's Berline. Indeed, over all that North-east Region, on the skirts of Champagne and of Lorraine, where the great Road runs, the agitation is considerable. For all along, from this Pont-de-Sommeville North-eastward as far as Montmédi, at Post-villages and towns, escorts of Hussars and Dragoons do lounge waiting; a train or chain of military escorts; at the Montmédi end of it our brave Bouillé; an electric thunder-chain; which the invisible Bouillé, like a father Jove, holds in his hand—for wise purposes! Brave Bouillé has done what man could; has spread out his electric thunder-chain of military escorts, onward to the threshold of Châlons: it waits but for the new Korff Berline; to receive it, escort it, and, if need be, bear it off in whirlwind of military fire. They lie and lounge there, we say, these fierce troopers; from Montmédi and Stenai, through Clermont, Sainte-Menehould to utmost Pont-de-Sommeville, in all post-villages; for the route shall avoid Verdun and great towns: they loiter impatient, till the treasure arrive.

963. Judge what a day this is for brave Bouillé: perhaps the first day of a new glorious life; surely the last day of the old! Also, and indeed still more, what a day, beautiful and terrible, for your young full-blooded captains; your Dandosins, Comte de Damas, Duke de Choiseul, engineer Goguelat, and the like, intrusted with the secret!—Alas, the day bends ever more westward; and no Korff Berline comes to sight. It is four hours beyond the time, and still no Berline. In all village-streets, Royalist captains go lounging, looking often Paris-ward; with face of unconcern, with heart full of black care; rigorous quartermasters can hardly keep the private dragoons from cafés and dram-shops.† Dawn on our bewilderment, our new Berline; dawn on us, our Sun-Chariot of a new Berline, with the destinies of France!

964. It was of his Majesty's ordering, this military array of escorts; a thing soothing the royal imagination with a look of security and rescue; yet, in reality, creating only alarm, and where there was otherwise no danger, danger without end. For each Patriot, in these post-villages, asks naturally: This clatter of cavalry, marching and lounging of troops, what means it? To escort a Treasure? Why escort, when no patriot will steal from the Nation; or where is your Treasure?—There has been such marching and countermarching; for it is another fatality, that certain of these military escorts came out so early as yesterday; the 19th not the 20th of the month being the first appointed; which her Majesty, for some necessity or other, saw good to alter. And now consider the suspicious nature of patriotism; suspicious, above all, of Bouillé the Aristocrat; and how the sour doubting humor has had leave to accumulate and exacerbate for four-and-twenty hours!

965. At Pont-de-Sommeville, these Forty foreign Hussars of Goguelat and Duke Choiseul are becoming an unspeakable mystery to all men. They lounged long enough, already, at Sainte-Menehould; lounged and loitered till our National Volunteers there, all risen into hot wrath of doubt, "demanded 300 fusils of their Town-hall," and got them. At which same moment too, as it chanced, our Captain Dandoins was just coming in, from Clermont with his troop, at the other end of the Village. A fresh troop; alarming enough; though happily they are only Dragoons and French! So that Goguelat with his Hussars had to ride, and even to do it fast; till here at Pont-de-Sommeville, where Choiseul lay waiting, he found resting-place. Resting-place as on burning marl. For the rumor of him flies abroad; and men run to and fro in fright and anger: Châlons sends forth exploratory pickets of National Volunteers toward this hand; which meet exploratory pickets, coming from Sainte-Menehould, on that. What is it, ye whispered Hussars, men of foreign guttural speech; in the name of Heaven, what is it that brings you? A treasure?—exploratory pickets shake their heads. The hungry Peasants, however, know too well what Treasure it is; Military seizure for rents, feudalities; which no Villain could make us pay! This they knew;—and set to jingling their Parish-bell by way of tocsin; with rapid effect! Choiseul and Goguelat, if the whole country is not to take fire, must needs, be there Berline, be there no Berline, saddle and ride. 966. They mount; and this parish tocsin happily ceases. They ride slowly Eastward; toward Sainte-Menehould; still hoping the Sun-Chariot of a Berline may overtake them. Ah me, no Berline! And near now is that Sainte-Menehould, which expelled us in the morning, with its three hundred national fusils; which looks, belike, not too lovingly on Captain Dandoins and his fresh Dragoons, though only French;—which, in a word, one dare not enter a second time, under pain of explosion! With rather heavy heart, our Hussar Party strikes off to the left; through by-ways, through pathless hills and woods; they, avoiding Sainte-Menehould and all places which have seen them heretofore, will make direct for the distant Village of Varennes. It is probable they will have a rough evening ride.

967. This first military post, therefore, in the long thunder-chain, has gone off with no effect; or with worse, and your chain threatens to entangle itself! —The Great Road, however, is got hushed again into a kind of quietude, though one of the wakefullest. Indolent Dragoons cannot by any Quartermaster, be kept altogether from the dram-shop; where Patriots drink, and will even treat, eager enough for news. Captains, in a state near distraction, beat the dusky highway, with a face of indifference; and no Sun-Chariot appears. Why lingers it? Incredible, that with eleven horses, and such yellow Couriers and furtherances, its rate should be under the weightiest dray-rate, some three miles an hour! Alas, one knows not whether it ever even got out of Paris;—and yet also one knows not whether, this very moment, it is not at the Village-end! One's heart flutters on the verge of unutterabilities.
CHAPTER VI.

OLD-DEAGOON DROUET.

968. In this manner, however, has the Day bent downward. Wearied mortals are creeping home from their field-labor; the village-artisan eats with relish his supper of herbs, or has strolled forth to the village-street for a sweet mouthful of air and human news. Still summer-eventide everywhere! The great Sun hangs flaming on the utmost Northwest; for it is his longest day this year. The hill tops rejoicing will ere long be at their ruddiest and blush Good-night. The thrush, in green dells, on long-shadowed leafy spray, pours gushing his glad serenade, to the babble of brooks grown audibler; silence is stealing over the Earth. Your dusty Mill of Valmy, as all other mills and drudgeries, may furl its canvas, and cease swashing and circling. The swinkt grinders in this Treadmill of an Earth have ground out another Day: and lounge there, as we say, in village-groups; movable, or ranked on social stone-seats; their children, mischievous imps, sporting about their feet. Unnotable hum of sweet human gossip rises from this Village of Sainte-Menehould, as from all other villages. Gossip mostly sweet, unnotable; for the very Dragoons are French and gallant; nor as yet has the Paris-and-Verdun Diligence, with its leathern bag, rumbled in, to terrify the minds of men.

969. One figure nevertheless we do note at the last door of the Village: that figure in loose-flowing night-gown, of Jean Baptiste Drouet, Master of the Post here. An acrid choleric man, rather dangerous looking; still in the prime of life, though he has served, in his time, as a Cédon Dragoon. This day, from an early hour Drouet got his choleric-up, and has been kept fretting. Hussar Gugudat in the morning saw good, by way of thrift, to bargain with his own Inn-keeper, not with Drouet regular Maitre de Post, about some gig-horse for the sending back of his gig; which thing Drouet perceiving came over in red ire, menacing the Inn-keeper, and would not be appeased. Wholly an unsatisfactory day. For Drouet is an acrid Patriot too, was at the Paris Feast of Pikes: and what do these Bouillé soldiers mean? Hussars,—with their gig, and a vengeance to it!—have hardly been thrust out, when Dandoin and his fresh Dragoons arrive from Clermont, and stroll. For what purpose? Cholerie Drouet steps out and steps in, with long-flowing night-gown; looking abroad, with that sharpness of faculty which stirred chol helps gives to man.

970. On the other hand, mark Captain Dandoins on the street of that same Village; sauntering with a face of indifference, a heart eaten of black care! For no Korff Berline makes its appearance. The great Sun flames broader toward setting: one's heart flutters on the verge of dread evening light! Steady, O Dandoins, stand with inscrutable indifferent face; though the yellow blockhead spurs past the Post-house; inquires to find it; and stirs the

* "Rapport de M. Rémy (in Choiseul, p. 140)."
Village, all delighted with his fine livery.—Lumbering along with its mountains of bandboxes, and Chaise behind, the Korf Berline rolls in; huge Acapulco ship with its Cock-boat, having got thus far. The eyes of the Villagers look enlightened, as such eyes do when a coach-transit, which is an event, occurs for them. Strolling Dragoons respectfully, so fine are the yellow liveries, bring hand to helmet; and a Lady in gypsy-hat responds with a grace peculiar to her.* Dandoins stands with folded arms, and what look of indifference and disdainful garrison-air a man can, while the heart is like leaping out of him. Curled disdainful mustachio; careless glance—which however surveys the Village-groups, and does not like them. With his eye he bespeaks the yellow Courier, Be quick, be quick! Thick-headed Yellow cannot understand the eye; comes up mumbling, to ask in words: seen of the Village! Nor is Postmaster Drouet unobservant all this while: but steps out and steps in, with his long-flowing night-gown, in the level sunlight; prying into several things. When a man's faculties, at the right time, are sharpened by choler, it may lead to much. That Lady in slouched gypsy-hat, though sitting back in the Carriage, does she not resemble some one we have seen, some time—at the Feast of Pikes or elsewhere? And this Grosse-Tête in round hat and peruke, which, looking rearward, pokes itself out from time to time, methinks there are features in it—Quick, Sieur Guillaume, Clerk of the Directoire, bring me a new Assignat! Drouet scans the new Assignat; compares the Paper-money Picture with the Gross Head in round hat there: by Day and Night! you might say the one was an attempted Engraving of the other. And this march of Troops; this sauntering and whispering,—I see it! 973. Drouet Postmaster of this Village, hot Patriot, Old-Dragoon of Condé, consider, therefore, what thou wilt do. And fast, for behold the new Berline, expeditiously yoked, cracks whipcord, and rolls away!—Drouet dare not, on the spur of the instant, clutch the bridles in his own two hands; Dandoins, with broadsword, might hew you off. Our poor Nationals, not one of them here, have 300 fusils, but then no powder; besides one is not sure, only morally certain. Drouet, as an adroit Old-Dragoon of Condé, does what is advisestest; privately bespeaks Clerk Guillaume, Old-Dragoon of Condé he too; privately, while Clerk Guillaume is saddling two of the fleetest horses, slips over to the Town-hall to whisper a word; then mounts with Clerk Guillaume; and the two bound eastward in pursuit, to see what can be done. 974. They bound eastward, in sharp trot: their moral-certainty permeating the Village, from the Town-hall outward, in busy whispers. Alas! Captain Dandoins orders his Dragoons to mount; but they, complaining of long fast, demand bread-and-cheese first;—before which brief repast can be eaten, the whole Village is permeated; not whispering now, but blustering and shrieking! National Volunteers, in hurried muster, shriek for gunpowder; Dragoons halt between Patriotism and Rule of the Service, between bread-and-cheese and fixed bayonets: Dandoins hands secretly his Pocket-book, with its secret dispatches, to the rigorous Quartermaster: the very Ostlers have stable-forks and flails. The rigorous Quartermaster, half-saddled, cuts out his way with the sword’s edge, amid leveled bayonets, amid Patriot vociferations, adjurations, flail-strokes; and rides frantic:—few or even none follow him; the rest, so sweetly constrained, consenting to stay there.

And thus the new Berline rolls; and Drouet and Guillaume gallop after it and Dandoins’s Troopers or trooper gallops after them; and Sainte-Menehould, with some leagues of the King’s Highway, is in explosion;—and your Military thunders-chain has gone off in a self-destructive manner; one may fear, with the frightfullest issues.

CHAPTER VII.

THE NIGHT OF SPURS.

976. This comes of mysterious Escorts, and a new Berline with eleven horses: “He that has a secret should not only hide it, but hide that he has it to hide.” Your first Military Escort has exploded self-destructive; and all Military Escorts, and a suspicious Country will now be up, explosive; comparable not to victorious thunder. Comparable, say rather, to the first stirring of an Alpine Avalanche; which, once stir it, as here at Sainte-Menehould, will spread,—all round, and on and on, as far as Stenai; thunder-mont, under illumination; distracted Patriots pleading and menacing! Brave young Colonel de Damas, in that uproar of distracted Patriotism, speaks some fire-sentences to what Troopers he has: "Comrades insulted at Sainte-Menehould: King and Country calling on the brave;" then gives the fire-word, "Draw swords." Whereupon, alas, the Troopers only strike their sword-handles, driving them farther home! "To me, whoever is for the King!" cries Damas in despair; and galloping, he with some poor loyal Two, of the Subaltern sort, into the bosom of the Night.*

979 Night unexampled in the Clermontais; shortest of the year; remarkablest of the century; Night deserving to be named of Spurs! Cornet Remy, and S®® few he dashed off with, has missed his road; 18-all®Ping for hours toward Verdun; then, for hours, across hedged country; through rouged hamlets, toward Varennes. Unlucky Cornet Remy; unluckier Colonel Damas, with whom there ride desperate only some loyal Two! More ride not of that Clermont Escort: of other Escorts, in other Villages, not even Two may ride; but only all curvet and prance,—impeded by storm-bell and your Village illuminating itself.

980 And Drouet rides and Clerk Guillumé; and the country runs.—Goguelat and Duke Choiseul are plunging through morasses, over cliffs, over stock and stone, in the shaggy woods of the Clermontais; by tracks; or trackless, with guides; Hussars tumbling into pitfalls, and lying "swooned three-quarters of an hour," the rest refusing to march without them. What an evening ride from Pont-de-Sommeville; what a thirty hours, since, Choiseul quitted Paris, with Queen's-valet Leonard in the chaise by him! Black Care sits behind the rider. Thus go they plunging; rustle the owlet from his branchy nest; champ the sweet-scented forest-herb, queen-of-the-meadows spilling her spikenard; and frighten the ear of Night. But hark! toward twelve o'clock, as one guesses, for the very stars are gone out: sound of the tocsin from Varennes? Checking bridle, the Hussar Officer listens: "Some fire undoubtedly!"—yet rides on, with double breathlessness, to verify.

981. Yes, gallant friends that do your utmost, is a certain sort of fire difficult to quench.—The Korff Berline, fairly ahead of all this riding Avalanche, reached the little paltry Village of Varennes about eleven o'clock; hopeful, in spite of that hoarse whispering Unknown. Do not all Towns now lie behind us; Verdun avoided, on our right? Within wind of Bouillé himself, in a manner; and the darkest of midsummer nights favoring us! And so we halt on the hilltop at the South end of the Village; expecting our relay; which young Bouillé, Bouillé's own son, with his Escort of Hussars, was to have ready; for in this Village was no Post. Distracting to think of: neither horse nor Hussar is here! Ah, and stout horses, a proper relay belonging to Duke Choiseul, do stand at hay, but in the Upper Village over the Bridge; and we know not of them. Hussars likewise do wait, but drinking in the taverns. For indeed it is six hours beyond the time; young Bonillé, silly stripling, thinking the matter over for this night, has retired to bed. And so our yellow Couriers, inexperienced, must rove, groping, bungling, through a Village mostly asleep: Postillions will not, for any money, go on with the tired horses; not, at least without refreshment; not they, let the Valet in round hat argue as he likes.

983. Miserable! "For five-and-thirty minutes" by the King's watch, the Berline is at a dead stand; Round-hat arguing with Churn-boots; tired horses slobbering their meal-and-water: yellow Couriers groping, bungling;—young Bouillé asleep, all the while, in the Upper Village, and Chosen's fine team standing there at hay. No help for it; not with a king's ransom; the horses deliberately slobber

984. And now see Boniface Le Blanc bustling as he never did for the jolliest toper. See Drouet and Guillaume, dexterous Old-Dragoons, instantly down blocking the bridge, with a "furniture-wagon they find there," with whatever wagons, tumbrils, barrels, barrows their hands can lay hold of;— till no carriage can pass. Then swiftly, the Bridge once blocked, see them take station hard by, under Varennes Archway; joined by Le Blanc, Le Blanc's Brother, and one or two alert Patriots he has roused. Some half-dozen in all, with National muskets, they stand close, waiting under the Archway, till that same Korff Berline rumble up.

985. It rumbles up: Alte là! lanterns flash out from under coat-skirts, bridles chuck in strong fists, two National muskets level themselves fore and aft through the two Coach-doors: "Mesdames, your Passports?—Alas, alas! Sieur Suisse, Procureur of the Township, Tallow-chandler also and Grocer, is there, with official grocer-paluteness; Drouet with fierce logic and ready wit:—The respected Traveling

"Deux Amis," vi 339-379.
Party, be it Baroness de Korff’s, or persons of still higher consequence, will perhaps please to rest itself in M. Sausse’s till the dawn strike up!

986. O Louis; O hapless Marie-Antoinette, fated to pass thy life with such men! Phlegmatic Louis, art thou but lazy semi-animate phlegm, then, to the center of thee? King, Captain-General, Sovereign Frank! if thy heart ever formed, since it began beating under the name of heart, any resolution at all, be it now then, or never in this world:—"Violent nocturnal individuals, and if it were persons of high consequence? And if it were the King himself? Has the King not the power, which all beggars have, of traveling unmolested on his own Highway? Yes: it is the King; and tremble ye to know it! The King has said, in this one small matter; and in France, or under God’s Throne, is no power that shall gainsay. Not the King shall ye stop here under this your miserable Archway; but his dead body only, and answer it to Heaven and Earth. To me, Bodyguards; Postillions, en avant!"—One fancies in that case the pale paralysis of these two Le Blanc musketeers; the drooping of Drouet’s under-jaw; and how Procureur Sausse had melted like tallow in furnace-heat; Louis faring on; in some few steps awakening Young Bouillé, awakening relays and Hussars: triumphant entry, with cavalcading high-brandishing Escort, and Escoirs, into Montmédy; and the whole course of French History different!

987. Alas, it was not in the poor phlegmatic man. Had it been in him, French History had never come under this Varennes Archway to decide itself.—He steps out: all step out. Procureur Sausse gives his grocer-arms to the Queen and Sister Elizabeth; Majesty taking the two children by the hand. And thus they walk, coolly back, over the Market-place to Procureur Sausse’s; mount into his small upper story: where straightforward his Majesty "demands refreshments." Demands refreshments, as is written; gets bread-and-cheese with a bottle of Burgundy; and remarks, that it is the best Burgundy he ever drank!

988. Meanwhile the Varennes Notables, and all men, official and non-official, are hastily drawing-on their breeches; getting their fighting gear. Mortals half-dressed tumble out barrels, lay felled trees; scouts dart off to all the four winds,—the tocsin begins clanging, “the Village illuminates itself.” Very singular: how these little Villages do manage, so adroit are they, when startled in midnight alarm of war. Like little adroit municipal rattlesnakes suddenly awakened: for their storm-ell rattles and rings; their eyes glisten luminous (with tallow-light), as in rattlesnake ire; and the Village will sting. Old-Dragoon Dronet is our engineer and generalissimo; valiant as a Ruy Diaz: now or never, ye Patriots, for the soldiery is coming; massacre by Austrians, by Aristocrats, wars more than civil, it all depends on you and the hour!—National Guards rank themselves, half-buttoned: mortals, we say still only in breeches, in under-petticoat, tumble out barrels and lumber, lay felled trees for barricades: the Village will sting. Rabid Democracy, it would seem, is not confined to Paris, then? Ah no, whatsoever Courtiers might talk; too clearly no. This of dying for one's King is grown into a dying for one's self, against the King, if need be.

989. And so our riding and running Avalanche and Hurly-burly has reached the Abyss, Korff Berline foremost; and may pour itself thither, and jumble: endless! For the next six hours, need we ask if there was a clattering far and wide? Clattering and tocsin and hot tumult, over all the Clermontais, spreading through the Three-Bishoprics: Dragoon and Hussar Troops galloping on roads and no-roads; National Guards arming and starting in the dead of night; tocsin after tocsin transmitting the alarm. In some forty minutes, Goguelat and Choiseul, with their wearied Hussars, reach Varennes. Ah, it is no fire, then; or a fire difficult to quench! They leaf the tree-barricades, in spite of National sergeant; they enter the village, Choiseul instructing his Troopers how the matter really is: who respond interjectionally, in their guttural dialect, "Der Konig; die Koniginn!" and seem stanch. These now, in their stanch humor, will, for one thing, set Presureur Sausse's house. Most beneficial: had not Drouet stormfully ordered otherwise; and even belled, in his extremity, "Cannoneers, to your guns!"—two old honeycombed Field-pieces, empty of all but cobwebs; the rattle whereof, as the Cannoneers with assured countenance trundled them up, did nevertheless abate the Hussar ankor; and produce a respectful ranking farther back. Jugs of wine, handed over the ranks,—for the German throat too has sensibility,—will complete the business. When Engiwork will prove hot," whereupon King Louis has "no orders to give."*

992. And so the tocsin clangs, and Dragoons gallop, and can do nothing, having galloped: National Guards stream in like the gathering of ravens: your exploding Thunder-chain, falling Avalanche, or what else we liken it to, does play, with a vengeance,—up now as far as Stenay and Bouillé himself.† Brave Bouillé, son of the whirlwind, he saddles Royal-Allemand; speaks fire-words, kindling heart and eyes; distributes twenty-five gold-louis a company;—Ride, Royal-Allemand, long-famed: no Tulleries Charge and Necker-Orléans Bust-Procession; a very King made captive, and world all to win!—Such is the Night deserving to be named of Spurs.

993. At six o'clock two things have happened. Lafayette's Aid-de-camp, Bomceuf, riding à franc étier, on that old Herb-merchant's route, quickened during the last stages, has got to Varennes; where the 10,000 now furiously demand, with fury of panic terror, that Royalalty shall forthwith return Parisward, that there be not infinite bloodshed. Also, on the other side, "English Tom," Choiseul's joker, flying with that Choiseul relay, has met Bouillé on the heights of Dun; the adamantine brow flushed with dark thunder; thunderous rattle of Royal-Allemand at his heels. English Tom answers as he can the brief question, How it is at Varennes?—then asks in turn: What he, English Tom, with M. de Choiseul's horses, is to do, and whither to ride?—To the Bottomless Pool! answers a thunder-voice; then again speaking and spurring, orders Royal-Allemand to the gallop; and vanishes, swearing (en jurant).† 'Tis the last of our brave Bouillé. Within sight of Varennes, he having drawn bridle, calls a council of officers; finds that it is in vain. King Louis has departed, consenting; amid the clangor of universal storm-bell; amid the tramp of 10,000 armed men, already arrived; and say, of 60,000 flocking thither. Brave Deslons, even without "orders," darted at the River Aire with his Hundred;† swam one branch of it, could not the other; and stood there, dripping and panting, with inflated nostril; the 10,000 answering him with a shout of mockery, the new Berline lumbering Parisward its weary inevitable way. No help, then, in Earth; nor, in an age not of miracles, in Heaven!

994. That night, "Marquis de Bouillé and twenty-one more of us rode over the Frontiers: the Bernardine monks at Orval in Luxemburg gave us supper and lodging."! With little of speech, Bouillé rides: with thoughts that do not break speech. Northward, toward uncertainty, and the Cimmerian Night: toward West-Indian Isles, for with thin Emigrant delirium the son of the whirlwind cannot act; toward England, toward premature Stoical death; not toward France any more. Honor to the Brave; who, be it in this quarrel or in that, is a substance and articulate-speaking piece of human Valor, not a façonerding hollow Spectrum and squeaking and gibbering Shadow! One of the few Royalist Chief-actors this Bouillé, of whom so much can be said.

995. The brave Bouillé too, then, vanishes from the tissue of our Story. Story and tissue, faint ineffectual Emblem of that grand Miraculous Tissue, and Living Tapestry named French Revolution, which did weave itself then in very fact, "on the loud-sounding Loom of Time!" The old Brave drop out from it, with their strivings; and new acrid Drouets, of new strings and color, come in:—as in the manner of that weaving.

CHAPTER VIII.

THE RETURN.

996. So, then, our grand Royalist Plot, of Flight to Metz, has executed itself. Long hovering in the background, as a dread royal ultimatum, it has rushed forward in its terrors; verily to some purpose. How many Royalist Plots and Projects, one after another, cunningly-devised, that were to explode like powder-mines and thunder-claps; not one solitary Plot of which has issued otherwise! Powder-mine of a Séance Royale on the 23d of June, 1789, which exploded as we then said, "through the touch-hole;" which next, your war-god Broglie having reloaded it, brought a Bastille about your ears. Then came fervent Opera-Repast, with flourishing of sabers, and O Richard, O my King; which aided by Hunger, produces Insurrection of Women, and Pullos, Athene, in the shape of Demoiselle Théroigne. Valor profits not; neither has fortune smiled on fanfaronade. The Bouillé Armament ends as the Broglie one has done. Man after man spends himself in this cause, only to work it quicker ruin; it seems a cause doomed, forsaken of Earth and Heaven.

997. On the 6th of October gone a year, King Louis escorted by Demoiselle Théroigne and some two hundred thousand, made a Royal Progress and Entrance into Paris, such as man had never witnessed; we proposed him Two more such; and accordingly another of them, after this Flight to Metz, is now coming to pass. Théroigne will not escort here; neither does Mirabeau now "sit in one of the accompanying carriages." Mirabeau lies dead, in the Pantheon of Great Men. Théroigne lies living, in dark Austrian Prison; having gone to Liége, professionally, and being seized there. Bemurured now by the hoarse-flowing Danube: the light of her Patriot Supper-parties gone quite out; so lies Théroigne: she shall speak with the Kaiser face to face, and return. And France lies—how! Fleeting Time shears down the great and the little; and in two years alters many things.

998. But at all events, here, we say, is a second ignominious Royal Procession, though much altered; to be witnessed also by its hundreds of thousands. Patience, ye Paris Patriots; the Royal Berline is returning. Not till Saturday: for the Royal Berline travels by slow stages; amid such loud-voiced confluent sea of National Guards, sixty thousand as they count; amid such tumult of all people. Three National-Assembly Commissioners, famed Barnave, famed Pétion, generally respectable Latour-Maubourg, have gone to meet it; of whom the two former ride in the Berline itself beside Majesty, day after day. Latour, as a mere respectability, and man of whom all men speak well, can ride in the rear, with Dame de Tourzel and the Soubrettes.

999. So on Saturday evening, about seven o'clock, Paris by hundreds, by thousands is again drawn up, not now dancing the tricolor joy-dance of hope; nor as yet dancing in fury-dance of hate and revenge; but in silence, with vague look of conjecture, and curiosity mostly scientific. A Saint-Antoine Placard has given notice this morning that “whosoever insults Louis shall be caned, whosoever applauds him shall be hanged.” Behold then, at last, that wonderful New Berline; encircled by blue National sea with fixed bayonets, which flows slowly, floating it on, through the silent assembled hundreds of thousands. Three yellow Couriers sit atop bound with ropes: Pétion, Barnave, their Majesties, with sister Elizabeth, and the children of France, are within.

1000. Smile of embarrassment, or cloud of dull sourness, is on the broad phlegmatic face of his majesty; who keeps declaring to the successive Official persons, what is evident, “Eh bien, me voilà (Well here you have me);” and what is not evident, “I do assure you I did not mean to pass the frontiers,” speeches natural for that poor Royal Man; which Decency would veil. Silent is her Majesty, with a look of grief and scorn; natural for that Royal Woman. Thus lumbers and creeps the ignominious Royal Procession, through many streets, amid a silent-gazing people: comparable, Mercier thinks, to some Procession du Roi de Bascoche; or say, Procession of King Crispin, with his Dukes of Satormania and royal blazonry of Cordwainery. Except indeed that this is not comic; ah no, it is comic-tragic; with bound Couriers and a Doom hanging over it; most fantastic, yet most miserably real. Misembled fleble ludibrium of a Pickle-herring Tragedy! It sweeps along there, in most ungorgeous pall, through many streets in the dusty summer evening; gets itself at length waggled out of sight; vanishing in the Tulleries Palace,—toward its doom, of slow torture, pite fort et dure.

1001. Populace, it is true, seizes the three rope-bound yellow Couriers; will at least massacre them. But our august Assembly, which is sitting at this great moment, sends out Deputation of rescue; and the whole is got huddled up. Barnave, “all dusty,” is already there, in the National Hall; making brief discreet address and report. As indeed, through the whole journey, this Barnave has been most discreet, sympathetic; and has gained the Queen’s trust, whose noble instinct teaches her always who is to be trusted. Very different from heavy Pétions; who, if Campan speak truth, ate his luncheon, comfortably filled his wine-glass, in the Royal Berline; flung out his chicken-bones past the nose of Royalty itself; and, on the King’s saying, “France cannot be a Republic,” answered, “No, it is not ripe yet.” Barnave is hence—forth a queen’s adviser, if advice could profit: and her Majesty astonishes Dame Campan by signifying almost a regard for Barnave; and that, in a day of retribution and Royal triumph, Barnave shall not be executed.

1002. On Monday night Royalty went; on Saturday evening it returns: so much, within one short week, has Royalty accomplished for itself. The Pickle-herring Tragedy has vanished in the Tuileries Palace, toward “pain strong and hard.” Watched, fettered and humbled, as Royalty never was. Watched even in its sleeping-apartments and inmost recesses: for it has to sleep with door set ajar, blue National Argus watching, his eye fixed on the Queen’s curtains; nay, on one occasion, as the Queen cannot sleep, he offers to sit by her pillow, and converse a little!

CHAPTER IX.
SHARP SHOT.

1003. In regard to all which this most pressing question arises: What is to be done with it? Depose it! resolutely answer Robespierre and the thorough-going few. For, truly, with a King who runs away, and needs to be watched in his very bedroom that he may stay and govern you, what other reasonable thing can be done? Had Philip d’Orléans not been a caput mortuum! But of him, known as one defunct, no man now dreams. Depose it not; say that it is inviolable, that it was spirited away, was enlevé; at any cost of sophistry and solecism, re-establish it! so answer with loud vehemence all manner of Constitutional Royalists; as all your pure Royalists do naturally likewise, with low vehemence, and rage compressed by fear, still more passionately answer. Nay Barnave and the two Lameths, and what will follow them, do likewise answer so. Answer with their whole might; terror-struck at the unknown Abysses on the verge of which, driven thither by themselves mainly, all now reels ready to plunge.

1004. By mighty effort and combination, this latter course is the course fixed on; and it shall by the strong arm, if not by the clearest logic, be made good. With the sacrifice of all their hard-earned popularity, this notable Triumvirate, says Toulougeon, “set the Throne up again, which they had so toiled to overturn: as one might set up an overturned pyramid, on its vertex;” to stand so long as it is held.

1005. Unhappy France; unhappy in King, Queen and Constitution; one knows not in which unhappiest! Was the meaning of our so glorious French Revolution this, and no other, That when Shams and Delusions, long soul-killing, had become body-killing, and got the length of Bankruptcy and Inanition, a great People rose and, with one voice, said, in the name of the Highest: Shams shall be no more? So many sorrows and bloody horrors, endured, and to be yet endured through dismal coming centuries, were they not the heavy price paid and payable for the same: Total Destruction of Shams from among men? And now, O Barnave Triumvirate! Is it in such double-distilled Delusion, and Sham even of a Sham, that an effort of this kind will rest acquiescent? Messieurs of the popular Triumvirate, never! —But, after all, what can poor popular Triumvirates, and fallible august Senators, do? They can, when the truth is all too horrible, stick their heads ostrich-like into what sheltering Fallacy is nearest; and wait there, a posteriori.

1006. Readers who saw the Clermontais and Three-Bishoprics gallop in the Night of Spurs; Diligences ruffling up all France into one terrific terrified Cock of India; and the town of Nantes in its shirt,—may fancy what an affair to settle this was. Robespierre, on the extreme Left, with perhaps Pétion and lean old Goupil, for the very Triumvirate has dedicated, are shrieking hoarse; drowned in Constitutional clamor. But the debate and arguing of a whole Nation; the bellowings through all Journals, for and against; the reverberant voice of Danton; the Hyperion shafts of Camille, the porcupine-quills of implacable Marat:—conceive all this.

1007. Constitutionalists in a body, as we often predicted, do now recede from the Mother Society, and become Feuillans; threatening her with inanition, the rank and respectability being mostly gone. Petition after Petition, borne in Deputation, comes praying for Judgment and Déchéance, which is our name for Deposition; praying, at lowest, for Reference to the Eighty-three Departments of France. Hot Marseillese Deputation comes declaring, among other things: "On- Phocean Ancestors flung a Bar of Iron into the Bay at their first landing; this Bar will float again on the Mediterranean brine before we consent to be slaves." All this for four weeks or more, while the matter still hangs doubtful; Emigration streaming with double violence over the frontiers;* France, seething in fierce agitation of this question and prize-question: What is to be done with the fugitive Hereditary Representative?

1008. Finally, on Friday the 15th of July, 1791, the National Assembly decides; in what negatory manner we know. Whereupon the Theaters all close, the Bourne-stones and Portable-chairs begin spouting. Municipal Placards flaming on the walls, and Proclamations published by sound of trumpet, "invite to repose;" with small effect. And so, on Sunday the 17th, there shall be a thing seen, worthy of remembering. Scroll of a Petition, drawn up by Brissots, Dantons, by Cordelières, Jacobins; for the thing was infinitely shaken and manipulated, and many had a hand in it: such Scroll lies now visible, on the wooden framework of the Fatherland's Altar, for signature. Unworking Paris, male and female, is crowding thither, all day, to sign or to see. Our fair Roland herself the eye of History can discern there "in the morning;" not without interest. In few weeks the fair Patriot will quit Paris; yet perhaps only to return.

1009. But what with sorrow of balked Patriotism, what with closed theaters, and Proclamations still

* Bouillé. ii. 101.
† "Histoire Parlementaire," xi. 104-105.
publishing themselves by sound of trumpet, the fervor of men's minds, this day is great. Nay, over and above, there has fallen out an incident, of the nature of Farce-Tragedy and Riddle; enough to stimulate all creatures. Early in the day, a Patriot (or some say, it was a Patriotess, and indeed the truth is undiscoverable), while standing on the firm deal-board of Fatherland's Altar, feels suddenly, with indescribable torpedo-shock of amazement, his boot-sole pricked through from below; clutches up suddenly this electrified boot-sole and foot; discerns next instant—the point of a gimlet or brad-awl playing up, through the firm deal-board, and now hastily drawing itself back!...in hand: they must have come in over-night; they have a supply of provisions,—no "barrel of gunpowder" that one can see; they affect to be asleep; look blank enough, and give the lamest account of themselves. "Mere curiosity; they were boring up, to get an eye-hole; to see, perhaps, whatever, from that new point of vision could be seen."—little that was edifying, one would think! But indeed what stupidest thing may not human Dullness, Prurience, Lubricity, Chance and the Devil, choosing Two out of Half-a-million idle human heads, tempt them to?*

1010. Sure enough, the two human individuals with their gimlet are there. Ill-starred pair of individuals! For the result of it all is, that Patriotism, fretting itself, in this state of nervous excitability, with hypotheses, suspicions and reports, keeps questioning these two distracted human individuals, and again questioning them; claps them into the nearest Guard-house, clutches them out again; one hypothetic group snatching them from another: till finally, in such extreme state of nervous excitability, Patriotism hangs them as spies of Sieur Motier; and the life and secret is choked out of them forevermore. Forevermore, alas! Or is a day to be looked for when these two evidently mean individuals, who are human nevertheless, will become Historical Riddles; and, like him of the Iron Mask (also a human individual, and evidently nothing more)—have their Dissertations? To us this only is certain, that they had a gimlet, provisions and a wooden leg; and have died there on the Lanterne, as the unluckiest fools might die.

1011. And so the signature goes on, in a still more excited manner. And Chaumette, for Antiquarians possess the very Paper to this hour,—"he signed himself" in a flowing saucy hand slightly leaned,; and Hébert, detestable Père Duchesne, as if "an inked spider had dropped on the paper;" Usher Maillard also has signed, and many Crosses, which cannot write. And Paris, through its thousand avenues, is welling to the Champ-de-Mars and from it, in the utmost excitability of humor; central Fatherland's Altar quite heaped with signing Patriots and Patriottes; the Thirty benches and whole internal Space crowded with on-lookers, with comers and goers; one regurgitating whirlpool of men and women in their Sunday clothes. All which a Constitutional Sieur Motier sees; and Bailly, looking into it with his long visage made still longer. Auguring no good; perhaps Déchéance and Deposition after all! Stop it, ye Constitutional Patriots; fire itself is quenchable,—yet only questionable at first.

1012. Stop it, truly: but how stop it? Have not the first free People of the Universe a right to petition?—Happily, if also unhappily, here is one proof of riot: these two human individuals hanged at the Lanterne. Proof, O treacherous Sieur Motier? Were they not two human individuals sent thither by thee to be hanged; to be a pretext for thy bloody Drapeau Rouge? This question shall many a Patriot, one day, ask; and answer affirmatively, strong in Preternatural Suspicion.

1013. Enough, toward half-past seven in the evening, the mere natural eye can behold this thing; Sieur Motier, with Municipals in scarf, with blue National Patrollotism, rank after rank, to the clang of drums; wending resolutely to the Champ-de-Mars; Mayor Bailly, with elongated visage, bearing, as in sad duty bound, the Drapeau Rouge. Howl of angry derision rises in treble and bass from a hundred thousand throats, at the sight of Martial Law; which nevertheless, waving its Red sanguinary Flag, advances there, from the Gros-Caillou Entrance; advances, drumming and waving, toward Altar or Fatherland. Amid still wilder howls, with objurgations, oaths, jeers, and volleys of pebbles and mud, saxes et facies; with crackle of a pistol-shot;—finally with volley-fire of Patrollotism; leveled muskets; roll of volley on volley! Precisely after one year and three days, our sublime Federation Field is wetted, in this manner, with French blood.

1014. Some "Twelve unfortunately shot," reports Bailly, counting by units; but Patriotism counts by tens and even by hundreds. Not to be forgotten, nor forgiven! Patriotism dies, shrieking, execrating; Camille ceases journalizing, this day; great Danton with Camille and Fréron have taken wing, for their life; Marat burrows deep in the Earth, and is silent. Once more Patrollotism has triumphed; one other time; but it is the last.

This was the Royal Flight to Varennes. Thus was the Throne overturned thereby; but thus also was it victoriously set up again—on its vertex; and will stand while it can be held.
